Miscellaneous.

My First Love.

That I was in love was a fact that did not admit of a shadow of doubt. I deported myself like a person in love; I talked like a person in love; I looked like a person in love, and I felt like a person in love. The affection which had taken possession of my youthful heart was no every day one: I was sure of that. There wern't words enough in the English language to describe the height, depth, length and breadth of its grandeur. It was destined to be a grand accompaniment of the ages yet to be! a fixed principle throughout eternity; a planet of surpassing beauty in the broad heavens of home affections. My love was returned! the strong yearnings of my nineteen-year-old-heart went out in the direction of the most beautiful maiden in all ——shire; and the most beautiful maiden in all ——shire in return, sent the yearnings of her heart out to meet mine. Twice a week, as often as the weeks came round, I went up to the old brown house of Dr. Stoddard, to tell his daughter my love, and as regularly listened to a recital of its return from the lips of my charming Janet. The good doctor made merry at our expense, and his jolly wife took a wicked pleasure in constantly reminding us of our youth. Janet was tortured by sly references to her play-house in the shed, her long sleeved piafore and pantalettes of six months before; while I was offered, while the doctor's wife wore a face of immoveable sobriety, an old coat of the doctor's for my mother to make into a dressing gown for me.

We were, nevertheless, determined to be married. We could steal slowly away from the house while our cruel friends reposed in the arms of Morpheus; he us on the "wings of love," to the nearest city: Janet would become, in a moment's time, Mrs. Jason Brown, and I Mr. Jason Brown's husband.

At once we set about making preparations for this important journey. Everything, of course, must be conducted with the greatest secresy. At twelve o'clock I was to leave my home stealthily, get my father's grey nag noiselessly out of the barn and harness her, and then proceed to Janet. Janet was to be waiting for me at her chamber window. I was to place a ladder at that same window, she was to descend that ladder; we were to fly down to the road through the old lane, to the spot were the horse was fastened, and then the wind should not outrun us.

There was but one difficulty in the way, Janet's room was shared by her sister Fanny, a little, mischievous, wicked creature, of eleven summers, who, to use Janet's words, 'was awake at all hours of the night.' There was but one way for us if Fanny was aroused; she must be bribed into silence. For that purpose I placed in Janet's hand a round, shining, silver dollar. But Janet needed assistance, so she concluded to make Fanny her confidant the very afternoon before we started, and in that case prevent all possibility of her raising the house by a sudden outcry.

Well, the long looked-for, and yet dreaded night, arrived at last. How slowly its leaden feet carried away the hours, and what a strange heartful of emotions I bore up, as I sat by my chamber window, looking out, as I thought, for the last time, upon the home of my father. The moon was out in all her splendor; she was kind to me, lighting up with her silver touches, all the spots my eyes might wish to rest upon before I went out into the world a wanderer. The broad fields lay out smooth and shining before my gaze; the fields in which I had worked by my father's side since I was a little boy; ah! a dear, kind father, he had been! (at this juncture my throat began to swell.) I turned away from the window.

If I could but see my mother once more! I exclaimed, rubbing my eyes with my coat sleeve. No one ever had a better mother than I have.

I sat down in a chair and sobbed outright. I looked around for something to take with me that my mother's hand had blessed with her touch. There was a spinning wheel in the room where I slept; at the end of the spindle hung a woollen roll. With my knife I half cut and half tore it off, pressed it fervently to my lips, and then placed it tenderly in my vest pocket. I had not time to do more, the old clock in the kitchen warned me solemnly that my appointed time had arrived; and with a slow, sad, yet noiseless step, I left the house. Once out in the open air, my wonted lightness of spirits returned. I consoled myself with the thought that in a few years I should return again, a strong, healthy, wealthy, respected and influential man; an honor to my parents, a blessing to my friends, and the husband of Janet.

I have often wondered since, how I succeeded in getting away from home with my horse and cart without arousing any one. But as good luck would have it, I made a triumphant exit from the old place, and in a few moments was jogging fearlessly along towards the house of Janet. My only dread was of the little sprite Fan.; if after all she should betray us, what a direful, dreadful, mischief it would be! what a wretched predicament affairs would be in! I groaned aloud at the thought; yet I put a brave face upon the matter; I said if it was right that we should go, we should go; if it wasn't right, in all probability we should stay at home; yet, right or not right, if that miserable little Fan did betray us, I'd spend all my days in avenging the wrong—that was certain. Was I in earnest? did I mean it? But we shall see.

How earnestly and anxiously I gazed towards the chamber window of Janet, as, after fastening my horse by the roadside, I walked up the long lane that led to the doctor's house. O joy inexpressible! the waving of a white handkerchief in the moonlight told me that every thing was right, and in a few moments I should clasp Janet fondly to my breast—mine, mine, forever! Ah, how happy I was! so happy, indeed, that I stood still there in the moonlight, with my two hands pressed firmly to my left side, for fear my over-loaded heart would burst away from me entirely. What a figure I must have cut then! What an Apollo I must have looked with my fine proportions, wrapped up in my wedding suit! I was tall; I was gaunt; I am sure I was ugly looking at that moment.

What possessed me, I cannot tell, but from an old chest I had taken a blue broadcloth swallow-tail coat that had belonged to my grandfather in the time of the wars, and in the pride of my youth had got into it. The tails came nearly to my arm-pits. The sleeves reached down to the tips of my fingers, hiding entirely from view the luxuriant pair of white silk gloves, which I had allowed myself for the important occasion. Above this uncouth pile of blue broadcloth was perched a hat! O ye stars and moon that looked upon it, testify with me that it was a hat—a hat—a hat and not a stove-pipe and not a boot leg! That hat! looking back at it through the mists of twenty-five years, it seems to have arisen to the stature of two full feet, while its brim appears little wider than my thumb nail. My eyesight is not quite as perfect now as it used to be, and so I may not see quite rightly. Make all due allowances dear reader.

I say that I must have looked ugly at that moment. Be that as it may, I thought I was looking splendidly; I thought the figure I cut was an honor to the name of Brown, and I was proud of it: proud as I stalked up to Janet's window and placed carefully there the ladder that was to bear her to my side. Every thing was silent about the house. Fate was surely with us; Fanny had been bribed into service. As I stood there, I could see her light, lithe little figure flit noiselessly to and fro by the window, and how I blessed her—blessed her, from the very bottom of my heart, for her kindness.

At last Janet commenced descending the ladder, and as she did so, the moon crowded in out of sight under a huge black cloud.—The very heavens favored us; our success might be looked upon as fixed. Three steps more upon the ladder's rounds and Janet's dainty little feet would stand upon terra firma beside my own. The steps were taken, and she held for a moment fondly by the sleeves of my new broadcloth, before we looked up to the window, both with upraised hands to catch a small bundle of clothing that Fanny was to throw down to us, and which we had no other means of carrying with us.

Be quiet, Fan, whispered Janet, as her sister appeared at the window and poised the bundle above our heads. Be quiet, Fan, for heaven's sake and drop it quickly.

But Fan still stood there, swinging backward and forward, the huge bundle, without heeding Janet's earnest entreaties.

Do, do, throw it, Fanny dear! Do have some mercy on me! What if father should know of this? What if he should be awakened ——

La, give it to her, Fan: don't plague your sister, she's in a hurry! called a voice at that moment from the closed blinds of the parlor windows, which belonged to none other than Dr. Stoddard. Give her the things, and tell the boys to carry out a bag of corn, a cheese, some wheat, and some butter to the cart. Janet must have a setting out. Only be still about it, Fan.

For a moment we were petrified upon the spot. I thought I should fall to the ground. What should we do; run, faint, die, evaporate or go mad? While we stood undecided, two huge matresses fell at our feet from the window, followed at once by sheets, pillow-cases, quilts, table cloths, and sundry other articles necessary to the setting up of a respectable housekeeping establishment.

Mother, mother, don't one of these new feather beds belong to Janet? called Charlie Stoddard, from one part of the house.

Yes, yes, and a bolster, and a pair of nice pillows, too. Carry 'em right out of the front door, was the answer.

Whose horse have you Jason? asked the doctor, pushing up the blind. Your father's? Y-e-e-s, sir, I stammered.

Humph! didn't you know better than that? That old gray isn't worth a button to go. Why didn't you come up to my barn and get my black mare? Sam, Sam, hurry away straight to the barn and harness black Molly for Jason. If you believe it, he was going to start off with his father's old horse! Be quick, Sam; work lively; they're in a hurry; it's time they were off.

Have you anything with you Janet to eat on the road? put in Mrs. Stoddard, poking her head out of the window.

No, ma'am, faltered Janet, moving a step or two from me.

Well, that's good forethought! And if I live, there isn't a bit of cake cooked in the house, either! Can you make some white bread and bacon, and some brown bread and cheese, do, Jason? It's all we have.

Yes, ma'am, I said meekly, stepping easily as I could a little farther from Janet.

Look, father and mother, quick, the moon is out, and see Jason's new coat and hat! called Fan, from the window, her merry voice trembling with suppressed laughter. Isn't that coat a splendid one, father? just look at the length of its tails.

Just give me my glasses, wife, said the doctor. Is it a new one, Jason?

Yes, sir, rather new, I said, giving an eager look in the direction of the lane.

Well, drawled the doctor, eyeing me slowly, that coat is handsome.

And his hat, father! called the wicked little Fan.

I de-clare! exclaimed the doctor. Wife, wife, look here, and see Jason's coat and hat!

What should I do? stand there till morning before that incessant fire of words? should I run? should I sneak off slowly, as Janet was doing? What, oh! what should I do?

Don't they look nice, mother? asked the doctor, putting one broad, brown hand over his mouth, and doubling his gray head almost down to his knees. He-haw he-haw, hi-he-haw! mother—he-haw! don't they look nice? roared the doctor.

I couldn't stand it any longer. The doctor's laughter was a signal: it was echoed from all parts of the house. Fan cackled from the chamber window; Sam shouted from the barn; Mrs. Stoddard, 'ho-ho-ho'd' from the kitchen; while Charlie threw himself down in the door-way and screamed like a wild Indian. I turned around: I gave a leap across the garden. Every Stoddard called after me. I am wrong; every Stoddard but Janet; she remained silent. One told me to come back for the bread and cheese; another bade me wait for black Molly and the new buggy; Fan bade me hold up my coat tail, or I should get them draggled. I didn't heed any of these requests; I went directly for home. I reached home, feeling sheepish—no, sheepish is a weak word for it—I can't express to you how I felt. I had a great idea of hanging myself; I thought I had better be dead than alive; that I had made an idiot of myself. It was all plain; Fan had betrayed us. I vowed vengeance against her until broad daylight, then sneaked out to the barn and hid in the haystack. I staid there until Charlie Stoddard brought home my father's horse.

The old gentleman was frightened; wanted to know how he came by the horse. He was told to ask me: he did ask me, and I made a clean breast of it. I didn't promise him not to repeat the offence; there was no need of it; but I am sure of this, I did not look at a girl for seven years—no, not for seven years. When the eighth year came round, I remembered my old vow against Fanny Stoddard. Well, to make a long story short, I married Fanny. Janet became a parson's wife.

And here let me tell you in confidence, reader, that I really think little Fanny Stod eard had a very deep motive in her head when she betrayed Janet and me, though she was but a child. She liked me even then, I believe. Well, at any rate, she declares every time that the affair is mentioned, that I have had my revenge upon her. Bless her faithful heart, it has been indeed a sweet one!

Evening.

There are two periods in the life of a man to which the evening hour is peculiarly interesting; youth and age. In youth we love its mellow moonlight, its million of stars, its soothing shade and sweet serenity. Amid these scenes, we can commune with those we love, and twine the wreath of friendship, while there is none to witness, but the generous heaven, and the spirits that hold their endless Sabbath there. We look abroad on creation, spread in the slumber of a moonlight scene around; and wrapt in contemplation, fancy we see and hear the wasting wings and melting songs of other and purer worlds. It accords with the lighter flow of youthful spirits, the fervency of fancy, and the soft feelings of the heart. Evening is also delightful to virtuous age. It affords hours of undisturbed thought. It seems an emblem of the calm and tranquil close of a busy life, serene and mild, with the impress of its great Creator enstamped upon it. It spreads its quiet wings above the grave, and seems to promise that all shall be peace beyond it.

Great Battles in Europe.

The following catalogue of battles in which two European powers which have commenced hostilities anew, have borne an important part, will be read with interest:

At Lodi, in Lombardy, on the 10th of May, 1796, Napoleon gained a decisive victory over the Austrians, the most desperate contest having been at a wooden bridge over the Adda.

At Arcole, a little village of Northern Italy, on the 17th of November, 1796, Napoleon gained a great victory over the Austrians, but with terrible slaughter on both sides, the Austrians having 18,000 and the French 15,000 killed and wounded.

On the banks of the Trebbia river, in Italy, ten miles from Genoa, the French army, under Marshal Macdonald, on the 19th of June, 1799, fought an allied Austrian and Russian army, in a battle, which lasted three days, and in which the French lost 12,000 and the allies an equal number. It was in this vicinity that, two hundred and eighteen years before Christ, Hannibal fought a great battle and defeated the Romans.

At the plains of Marengo, at the foot of the Appenines, fourteen miles from the strong Sardinian fortificatons at Allessandria, in 1799, the French, under Marshal Joubert, was defeated by the combined Austrians and Russians, under Suwarrow. Each army had upwards of 7000 killed and wounded and several thousand prisoners.

At Eugen, in Baden, the French defeated an Austrian army on the 3d of May, 1800, the loss in killed and wounded on each side being set down at 7000 men.

At Hohenlinden, a village in Upper Bavaria, on the 3d of December, 1800, a great battle was fought between the French and the Bavarians, under Moreau, and the Austrians, under Archduke John. The Austrians were defeated with the loss of 14,000 men. The French loss was 9000.

At Austerlitz, on the 2d of December, 1805, Napoleon gained a great victory over the allied Austrian and Russian army. The allies, out of 80,000 men, lost 30,000, in killed, wounded and prisoners. The French lost 12,000.

At Maida, a small town in Naples, on the 4th of July, 1809, was one of the most remarkable battles on record—with the exception of New Orleans. A small English force, under Sir L. Stuart, defeated a great superior French force. The French, out of 75,000 men engaged, had 700 killed, between 3000 and 4000 wounded, and 1000 prisoners. The British lost only 44 killed, 2-4 wounded.

At Jena, in Central Germany, in the Duchy of Saxa Weimar, on the 14th of October, the grand French army, under Napoleon, totally defeated the Prussians, led by their king and the Duke of Brunswick, the latter of whom was killed in the battle. The Prussians lost 30,000 men in killed and wounded, and nearly as many prisoners. The French had 14,000 killed and wounded.

In the terrible battle at Eylau, on the 8th of February, 1807, the French gained a victory over the allied Russians and Prussian army, but at a great sacrifice of life. The allies lost 25,000 and the French 30,000.

At Frieldfield, in Prussia, the French again defeated the allied Russians and Prussians on the 16th of June, 1807. The allies lost 17,000 in killed and wounded; the French 8000.

At Wagram, a village of Lower Austria, eleven miles from Vienna, Napoleon fought a great battle with the Austrians, on the 6th of June, 1809. The armies lost each 25,000 men in killed and wounded; but the French remained masters of the field.

At Talavera, in Spain, on the 17th and 28th of July, 1809, the English and Spanish troops under the Duke of Wellington, totally defeated the French under Joseph Bonaparte and Marshals Jourdan and Victor. The British and Spanish lost 6,268 men, and the French 8,706 killed and wounded.

At Albuera, in Spain, on the 16th of May 1811, the British and allies, under Gen. Beresford, gained a victory over the French, under Marshal Soult. The French loss was 8,000; that of the allies nearly 7,000. the British alone having lost 4,300 out of 7,500 men engaged. When the muster of one British regiment was called after the battle, only three privates and one drummer answered to their names.

On the heights, four miles from Salamanca, in Spain, the English and Spaniards under Wellington, totally defeated the French under Marmont on the 22d of July, 1812. The allies lost 5,200 men, and the French 16,000.

At the battle of Smolenski, in Russia, in 1812, the French loss was 7,000 and that of the Russians 10,000.

At Borodino, on the 17th of September, was fought a desperate battle between the Russians and French. The French lost in killed, wounded and prisoners, 50,000, and the Russians about the same number. The survivors of the French army from the Russian campaign were not more than 35,000 out of an army of 500,000 men.

At Lutzen, in Russian Saxony, on the 23d, of May, 1813, the allied Russian and Prussian forces were defeated by the French under Napoleon, the French losing 18,000, and the allies 15,000 men.

At Bautzen, in Saxony, on the 21st and 22d of May, 1813, a battle took place between the allies and the French, in which the French loss was put down at 25,000, and that of the allies at 15,000.

At Dresden, in Saxony, on the 26th and 27th of August, 1815, the allies were defeated by the French. The loss of the allies was about 25,000 in killed, wounded and prisoners, and that of the French about 12,000.

At Leipsic, in Saxony, in October, 1813, a desperate battle was fought, which lasted three days, and the French were totally defeated by the allies. Napoleon lost two Marshals, twenty generals, and about 60,000 men. The allies lost 1700 officers and about 40,000 men.

In Vittoria, in Spain, on the 21st of June, 1813, the English and French fought a battle, in which the French lost 7000 and the English 5180.

At Toulouse, in France, Wellington defeated the French under Soult, on the 10th of April, 1814. French loss, 4,700; allied army's loss, 4580 men.

At Paris the allies lost 9093 men, and the French about 4300.

At Ligny, in France, a battle occurred between the Prussians and French, on the 16th of June, two days before the battle of Waterloo, in which the Prussians lost 15,000 men, and the French 6800.

In the indecisive battle at Quatre Bras, in Belgium, on the 16th of June, the day before that of Waterloo, the allies lost 5200 men, and the French 114.

At Waterloo, the total loss of the allies was 16,636 men. Napoleon's was about 40,000.

Neither the Austrians nor the Prussians can derive much encouragement from history to engage in a war with France. The French troops have only been matched in these wars by the English, the Spaniards, and the Russians, scarcely by the last named.

New Cathechism.

What is the chief end of man?

Money.

Who is most worthy of esteem?

He who dresses best, drives the fastest horses, and has the largest deposit in the bank.

Is any respect due to simple integrity?

None whatever.

By what rule should we discriminate in regard to our recognition of others?

We should consider whether they are likely to advance us in the esteem of those to whom we look for pecuniary profit, the basis of all worth and distinction.

Is there any life beyond this world?

None of any account. There is a sort of moonshiny existence recognized in religious books and Sunday services, but nothing of any practical value.

Would a man deserve to be considered an idiot who should make a serious matter of religious teachings?

In real truth, yes; but then it is well to make some religious show. It often helps one to better things.

What is the use of science and learning?

To facilitate money-making.

What is a poet?

A child, who plays with a rattle when he should be at work; a weakling, who prates nonsense and fancies he knows more than others, when the raggedest boy in the streets could cheat him out of his eye-teeth.

Is honesty a manly virtue?

Nothing of the sort. It is sometimes the best policy, but the greatest heads pay little regard to it.

How do you know a man?

Not by his dress, for he may not have earned it himself; not by his language and learning, for he may not have native wit enough to drive a bargain with a day-la borer; not by his self-esteem, for he may not be able to keep himself out of the poor-house. The best tests of a man are his knowledge of stocks, his strictness in accounts, his carefulness to look out for himself,—in short, his thorough appreciation of the value of every cent.

The Good Wife.

She commandeth her husband in any equal matter, by constantly obeying him. It was always observed that what the English gained of the French in battle by valor, the French regained of the English by cunning in treaties. So if the husband should chance by his power, in passion, to prejudice his wife's right, she wisely knoweth, by compounding and complying to rectify it again.

She never crosseth her husband in the spring tide of his anger, but stays till it be ebbing water. And then mildly she argues the matter, not so much to condemn him as to acquit herself.

She keeps home if she have not her husband's company, or leave for her parent to go abroad. For the house is the woman's centre.

Her clothes are rather comely than costly and she makes plain cloth to be velvet by her handsome wearing it. She is none of our dainty dames, who loves to appear in a variety of suits every day new, as if a good gown, like a stratagem of war, were to be used but once.

Her husband's secrets she will not divulge. Especially she is careful to conceal his infirmities. If he be none of the wisest, she so orders it that he appears on the public stage but seldom, and then he hath conned his part so well that he comes off with great applause.

In her husband's sickness she feels more grief than she shows. Partly that she may not dishearten him, and partly because she is not at leisure to seem so sorrowful, that she may be more serviceable.

The heaviest work of her servants she maketh light by orderly and seasonably enjoining it. Wherefore her service is accounted a preferment, and her teaching better than her wages.—Thos. Fuller's Holy State.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, July 2d, 1859.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

FOURTH OF JULY. Monday next will usher in the eighty-fourth anniversary of the nation's birth day. On this day, eighty-four years since, that venerable band of patriots, with Hancock at their head, in Independence Hall, at Philadelphia, proclaimed a new era for mankind. The doctrine of man's sovereignty, or his ability for self-government, roused the sleeping energies of a benighted world, and startled kings upon their thrones. The glad tidings met with a hearty response from every American breast— it was caught up by the people, and borne upon the breeze of public enthusiasm, from the cloud-capped hills of Maine to the fertile valleys of the Mississippi. "Independence now and Independence forever," was the watch-cry of the sages of the Revolution. They thought they saw in the dim future, when they pledged their 'fortunes and sacred honors' in support of their principles, that their fullest wishes would be realized. That those to whom they were to commit the sacred boon, would prove true to their trust; and as ages rolled round we still should be found a united and happy people. That the bonds of our union would strengthen with our growth; and that in harmony and concord we should travel on together to the fulfilment of our destiny. The return of the day, should not only awaken feelings of gratitude to a beneficent Providence for His manifold blessings and kind protection, but a spirit of watchfulness and jealousy for our rights, and with renewed pledges of devotion and fidelity to the Union, against the secret assaults of enemies without and traitors within. Ever bearing in mind, that in union lies our strength—that "united we stand, divided we fall."

At home we shall enjoy a quiet, but not less grateful celebration. The ringing of bells at sunrise, noon and evening; the meeting of fire companies, private assemblages, etc., fireworks and other demonstrations, will in part make up the ceremonies for our rural district. Not so in the city; there it is said, great preparations have been made, to render suitable honors to the occasion; orations are to be delivered; theaters, boat races and other amusements will be in full blaze during the day, and the most brilliant and splendid fireworks ever before exhibited, will be presented for the evening's entertainment. So attractive a spectacle, should the weather prove favorable, will draw, no doubt, from the neighboring towns, hosts of visitors.

FIRST FRUITS OF THE SEASON. We received the present week, from our esteemed friend and neighbor, Eli Hayden, a rich and most delicious box of strawberries; they were the finest we ever saw—both in regard to their flavor and size; one, a mammoth of its kind, measured four and three quarter inches in circumference. The cultivation of this fruit has certainly arrived to great perfection. It was an acceptable offering, for which we feel truly grateful. The younger members of our family, expressed by their looks, while enjoying the grateful repast, what we are obliged to do in words, to the generous donor.

QUINCY STONE DIVISION OF THE SONS OF TEMPERANCE. At a meeting of the above Order, held on Tuesday evening last, the following officers were elected for the ensuing quarter:

George Starbuck, W. P.; H. G. Wildman, R. S.; E. H. Starbuck, F. S.; John Wildman, C.; Emery Delano, I. S.; William Parker, 3d, W. A.; L. L. Perry, A. R. S.; James F. Coe, T.; Samuel Rinn, A. C.; Albert Holt, O. S.; Robert Scott, Chaplain.

MOWING BEE. We are again reminded on the occurrence of our National Festival, that the annual "Mowing Bee" of our valued friend, Captain Richard Newcomb, will be properly observed in the morning amid the congratulations of a host of friends, who will participate in this time-honored custom of his patriotic sires, and which he has for many years nobly continued.

FIREMEN'S AID, No. 1. We understand that the Hook and Ladder Company of this town, under the appropriate name designated, intend to commemorate in a rational manner, our Country's Jubilee—the 4th of July—by a Grand Festival at their quarters, during the afternoon and evening; at which guests and friends will generously receive the smiles and liberality of their popular Foreman and its noble-hearted Members.

☞ It is said that Dr. Stocking, by a skilful mode of treatment, saves thousands of aching teeth that other dentists would pronounce worthless. If this is so, people ought to know it, for one natural tooth is worth a dozen artificial ones. His office is at No. 19, Tremont Row, Boston.

Boston Correspondence.

BOSTON, June 30, 1859.

Mexico; unsettled condition; relations with the United States.—The War in Europe.—The Allies successful.

By the latest advices from Washington, we are assured, that distinguished gentlemen, both of the United States and Mexico, are desirous for a treaty arrangement, by which the inhabitants of the frontier of the two countries shall be protected. Such a proposition will soon be laid before the Executive. Treaties are about to be made by our Minister, Mr. McLean, which will grant the right of way to the United States over the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, and from other points of Mexican Territory, to the Pacific Ocean or Gulf of California. The route to be under the joint protection of the two governments. But it is not believed that any cession of Mexican territory will be made or even asked. As you will perceive, Mexico may still be considered in a state of anarchy, with no reliable government. The Liberal Party, so called, seem now to hold the cords, and appear to be fighting their way to the city of Mexico, and perhaps there, will "conquer a peace." In a commercial point of view, the movements in Mexico are of much importance to the interests of our own country. But at present, we want no annexation, and never an inch of Mexican territory, without a fair purchase, and on cheap terms, at that.

On the other side of the water, we have news to the 18th instant. The Austrians were still retreating. There had been no new battle, but a decisive one was expected within a week.

Lord Palmerston has formed a strong Cabinet, including Lord John Russel, Gladstone, Elgin, Cobden, Gibson and Lord Grenville. The new Ministry are said to be favorable to the cause of the Allies. So that the French Emperor has no fear at present from Great Britian.

At the Democratic State Convention, of Iowa, held on the 23d, General Dodge, the Democratic candidate for governor, openly and every where sustains the views of Senator Douglas. Iowa is sound to the core and enthusiastic on the doctrine of popular sovereignty. It is the sentiment of the great body of the American people and cannot be rubbed out. It is intimated that Mr. Douglas will soon be nominated by a mass meeting in New York, taking his late letter, as their political platform for the next national election.

For the Patriot.

The other Side

MR. EDITOR: In your paper of last week, in speaking of the "Strike of the Bootmakers" of this town, you say, that the "Strike was for an advance of wages;" such is not the case—for some of the employers pay from one dollar to one dollar and fifty cents per case more than the rate of wages established by the Society. The 'Strike' was to force the employers to discharge all workmen who refuse to join the Society. w.

We stand corrected.—ED.

CARRIAGE PAINTING. We are pleased to learn that this addition to our friend, E. B. Hersey's painting business, has been crowned with liberal success, thus giving evidence that his workmen in this particular branch are justly eminent in taste and artistic skill, which we a few weeks since announced to the public. Workmanship has proved our assertion.

DAN RICE'S GREAT SHOW COMING.—The real, original, veritable, Dan Rice, the universally known and equally popular American humorist is to be here next week, with certainly the most extraordinary variety of unique attractions ever gathered together in any one exhibition. In addition to the performances of a splendid Circus troupe, with "Dan," himself, as Clown, he will show a colossal 'Rhinoceros,' trained to perform in the ring; those inimitable 'Educated Mules,' an 'Elephant' that performs on the tight rope, a 'Syrian Goat,' (also an accomplished performer:) the wonderful horse 'Excelsior'—'Dancing Horses, etc., etc.—all in one tent, for a single price of admission. Who but 'Dan Rice,' would have thought of training a Rhinoceros to perform in the ring? Look out for a large rush when the "Great Show" comes in town.

THE NEW YORK WEEKLY. We perceive that Messrs. Street & Smith, the new proprietors of the above truly excellent story paper, have entered into an engagement with the renowned romancist, Harry Hazel, whereby they have secured the exclusive services of that gentleman. This movement on the part of Messrs. Street & Smith show their good taste and their correct appreciation of what will suit the public. Harry Hazel, from his connection as a writer of stirring romances, with the Flag of the Union, The Star Spangled Banner, and The Yankee Privateer, has made for himself a world-wide reputation; and there can be no doubt that his first story for the WEEKLY, which is to be entitled "THE MUTE SPY: or THE MASSACRE OF BLOODY BROOK;" and the first portion of which is to appear in the WEEKLY of July 2d, will double the number of readers of that already widely circulated journal.

TELEGRAPHIC. Our citizens, we think, will be pleased to learn, that through the instrumentality of a few enterprising and go-a-head individuals, our thriving little village has been brought into telegraphic communication with the most distant parts of the Union. Below, may be found a few of the most prominent places, in our vicinity, with whom we may hold daily correspondence through this medium:

Provincetown, and all stations on the Cape; Plymouth and Way Stations; New Bedford, Nantucket, Edgartown, Bridgewater, Hingham, (not forgeting Hull,) Salem, Lynn, Gloucester, and from Boston to any place in the States where wires are run.

Station—at the Office of the Mutual Fire Insurance Company, on Washington street.

C. A. HOWLAND, Operator.

OUR FLAG. We notice that the Flag Staff of the Niagara Engine Company, has been repainted by Messrs. S. H. Spear, and P Chubuck, jr., in the most beautiful manner, and on the morning of the 4th, our glorious Stars and Stripes will thereon be displayed, and it thus affords us pleasure, that the painters have endeavored to add to the patriotic occasion their own deserving labors.

DANCING. Prof. W. A. Knight intends opening a school for instruction in this beautiful and healthy art, in Mariposa Hall, this afternoon. Our young readers should not fail to become his pupils, as he comes highly recommended and deserves a large class.—For particulars see advertisement.

CODDINGTON SALOON—ICE CREAM. We learn that the proprietor of this long established Saloon, entertains his friends and customers, to-day and during the warm season, with Copeland's best Ice Creams, cakes, pies, confectionary, etc., thus rendering his place pleasant to visitors. Fireworks for the 4th furnished to customers, and patriotic zeal will cause their display from this popular resort on the night of the glorious Fourth.

STRAWBERRIES. It happened to be our good fortune, during this week, to receive from our prized friend, R. B. Leuchars, Esq, of this town, a large basket of strawberries, the richest and most luscious of the season; and for this very liberal token of friendship we hereby offer our kindest acknowledgments.

FOR THE FOURTH OF JULY. Straw Hats of all kinds; Light Soft Hats; Patent Leather Congress Boots and Shoes, various styles; Fine Calf Boots, Congress Boots, Oxford and Webster Ties, Goat and Enamelled Slippers, Women's Kid Slippers, all qualities, Fine Serge, Kid and Goat Boots, and a large variety of Children's Boots and Shoes.

An assortment of Rockets, Juvenile Fireworks, Fire Crackers, Pistols, Flags, &c., sold by C. Gill & Co.

SUDDEN DEATH. On Thursday last—the hotest day of the season—a man was discovered lying on the road, near William Totman's residence, in an impaired condition of health and when aid arrived, he was too far gone to impart information. His brother informs us, that his name was Thomas Cassiday, about thirty years of age, and being of strictly temperate habits, it is supposed that he was sun-struck.

☞ If you have sore lips, chapped hands, boils, scrofula, humors or any eruption of any kind, get a box of "MY MOTHER'S SALVE." It will do all it professes to, in the healing art. No one should be without it. See advertisement.

HARRY HAZEL

— IN THE —

NEW YORK WEEKLY!

THE publishers take pleasure in announcing to the reading world that they have secured the exclusive services of HARRY HAZEL for the NEW YORK WEEKLY, and that his first story will appear in the number for July 2d, which will be out and for sale by all News Agents throughout the United States about the 18th of June.

This THRILLING AND INTERESTING INDIAN ROMANCE is entitled

THE MUTE SPY;

A STORY OF

KING PHILLIP'S WAR.

— BY —

HARRY HAZEL,

Author of

"West Point Cadet," "Big Dick," "Middy of the Macedonian," 'Gallant Tom,' 'Yankee Jack,' 'Flying Yankee,' 'Red King,' 'Rebel Bride,' Harry Tempest,' 'Rival Chieftains,' 'Smuggler King,' 'Sylvia Seabury, or Yankees in Japan,' 'Rival Sisters,' 'Nun of St. Ursula,' &c. &c.

It is a remarkable fact, that among the thirty millions of people of this mighty Republic of the New World, there are but few, and those mostly among our learned men, who are in any great degree familiar with the history of the wars of the great Wampanoag Cheiftain, King Philip, against the colonists of New England, and their Indian allies, the Mehegans. During this sanguinary struggle, many scenes were inacted of the most startling and thrilling description, and many adventures made by both the white and the red man, almost too wonderful to be believed. Little, indeed, is known of the savage and merciless scenes enacted at Tiverton, Lancaster, Taunton, Dartmouth, Swanzey, Brookfield, Deerfield, Hadley, and other towns of the Colony; and less, much less, is known of the "Massacre of Bloody Brook," an event which struck more terror to the hearts of the colonists, and gave the Indians more courage and confidence, than any event of the war. On the field of Bloody Brook, "The Flower of Essex," a band of nearly a hundred young, enterprising, adventurous men, were attacked by a powerful band of savages, who had been lying in ambush, and indiscriminately butchered before they had an opportunity to make a defence. Light only escaped to relate the fate of their comrades.—All the rest perished on that bloody plain by the rifles, tomahawks, war-clubs and scalping-knives of a thousand infuriated savages.

The most remarkable scenes and adventures of this most savage war, form the basis of the Indian Romance, by HARRY HAZEL.

The characters portrayed in this work are the men and women of those rude, semi-barbarous days; and in no war, embraced in the history of the Anglo-Saxon or Algonquin races, was there ever more heroism, more devotion, more sacrifices, more hardships, more hellish intrigue, more inhuman acts, more subtlety and treachery, than during the terrible struggle which began in 1661 and ended in 1677, commonly known as "King Philip's War."

The author has selected the most thrilling and interesting events of that sanguinary period, at the same time only those that serve to develope a most ingeniously contrived and mysterious plot—one that cannot fail to enchain the reader's attention until its final development.

Those who have read the previous productions from the pen of HARRY HAZEL, do not require to be told that there is no man living who can compete with him in a story of this character. He stands unrivaled in this class of literature. As one of the leading contributors to the Flag of Our Union, Star Spangled Banner, Yankee Privateer, and other leading publications of the day, for a number of years, he has acquired a popularity that places him in the front rank of American story writers.

☞ Those who desire to secure this great Story by Harry Hazel, complete should send in their orders at once, to enable us to make arrangements to supply them. Wherever there is a News Agent order through him. We only desire to send the WEEKLY by mail to out-of-way places, where there is no News Dealer.—When sent by mail, the terms are $2 a year, or two copies for $3. Six months' subscription, $1. All orders by mail must be addressed to

Poetry.

The Sunset Land.

Oh dimly through the midst of years,
That roll their dreary waves between,
The gorgeous sunset land appears,
Arrayed in hues of fadeless green;
And from that far off and sunny clime,
Old hall forgotten songs arise
And stealing over the waves of Time
The sweetly lingering music dies.

As some bright island of the sea,
Forever blooming, ever fair;
Though cold, dark billows round it be,
Eternal sunshine hovers there.
Thus o'er the silent sea of years,
Our eager longing looks are cast,
Where robed in fadeless spring, appears
The sunlit Eden of the past.

There memory weaves her garlands green
Beside the lone, hope-haunted shore!
And musing 'mid the Arcadian scene,
Twines flowers that bloom for us no more.
Oh! hallowed clime! blest land of love!
Sweet paradise of earthly dreams!
Still through thy vale may fancy rove,
Still bask beneath thy evening beams.

And there they dwell—those cherished ones
With snow-white brows and waving hair;
I see them now—I hear their tones
Of sweetness sigh along the air.
Hark! how their silvery voices ring
In cadence with the winds low sigh;
Not sweeter is the wind-harp's string
That wakes at eve its melody.

They call us; see, they wave their hands—
As by the mirage lifted high,
That clime in all its beauty stands,
Against the forehead of the sky.
With wreathed brows—with laugh and song,
With tender look—hand clasped in hand,
They move along, that love-link throng—
Within the haunted sunset land.

The Quiet Slumber.

Lay him gently to his rest—
Fold his pale hands on his breast;
From his brow—
Oh! how cold and marble fair—
Softly part the tangled hair;
Look upon him now!
As a weary child he lies,
With the quiet, dreamless eyes,
O'er which the lashes darkly sweep,
And on his lip the quiet smile—
The soul's adieu to earthly strife—
And on his face the deep repose,
We never saw in life.
Peaceful be his rest, and deep;
Let him sleep.

No tears for him! he needs them not;
Along life's drear and toilsome road
Firmly his manly foot-steps trode,
Striving to bear his weary lot,
With such a pride upon his brow,
With such a pain within his heart—
The firmness of a manly will
Veiling the secret smart.

Oh! it is well the strife is o'er,
That thus so peacefully he lies,
Unheeding now the bitter words,
The cold, unpitying eyes.
Fold his mantle o'er his breast;
Peaceful be his sleep, and blest;
Let him rest.

No sigh to breathe above his bier,
No tear to stain the marble brow;
Only with tender praying love,
Only with faith that looks above,
We gaze upon him now.
No thought of toil and suffering past—
But joy to think the task is done,
The heavy cross at last laid down,
The crown of glory won.
Oh! hear him gently to his rest—
Oh! gently heap the flowery sod,
And leave his body to the dust,
His spirit to his God.

The Merry Laugh.

I love to hear a merry laugh,
Out-ringing wild and free,
As floats the music of the winds
Across the sunny sea.

The merry laugh goes hand in hand
With happiness and mirth;
And at its silvery toned command
Joy nestles round each hearth.

The merry laugh bespeaks a heart
With noble feelings warm,
One that will bravely do its part
In sunshine or in storm.

The music of a merry laugh
Sets aged hearts aglow,
The smiles gleam o'er the wrinkled brow
Like sunlight on the snow.

Then let the merry laugh ring out
Upon the balmy air,
And let its gladness put to rout
The bold intruder—Care.

Anecdotes.

My dear Colonel, I preceive you slept during sermon last Sunday; it is a very bad habit, said a worthy divine to one of his parishioners.

Ah, Doctor, I could not possibly keep awake, I was so drowsy.

Would it not be well Colonel to take a little snuff, to keep you awake?

Doctor, was the reply, would it not be well to put a little snuff in the sermon?

Why, George, what are you hoeing in the garden for at this time o' night?

Well, I was awful dry, mother, and don't the Bible say—

"Ho, every one that thirsteth?

The old lady drew her head in, closed the window, and collapsed.

Since I have been abroad, said Tom, I have eaten so much veal, that I am ashamed to look a calf in the face.

I suppose, then, said a wag who was present, you shave without a glass.

I fear you are about sewed up, said a croaking friend to a cheerful invalid.

Oh, no, I have only one little stitch in my side.

The Journeyman Printer's Secret.

You can take this case, said the foreman, here is a stick—here is some copy; and if you like a quiet and steady partner, you'll find this gentleman still enough in all conscience.

The "partner" merely looked up and faintly smiled in acknowledgment of the foreman's compliment, and kept on with his work, while the foreman turned away to attend to something else.

We worked on steadily until dinner time, as we were in a hurry to get the paper up, without exchanging a word, or even a look.

In the afternoon I had leisure to study the physiognomy of my neighbor. He was a young man, of about three or four-and-twenty, with handsome features, and a rather intellectual cast of countenance. His face was quite pale, and the raven darkness of his hair, eyebrows and eyes, made me immediately come to the conclusion, after thoroughly studying his physiognomy, that he was a hard student during his leisure hours, or that, depriving himself of the recreation of books or other sources of enjoyment, he spent all his working hours at the case. The latter supposition time proved correct.

As day after day passed by, I became more acquainted with him; and I found him to be a singular character. Beneath his stand, he had constructed a kind of closet, which contained a spirit lamp, a matress with bedding, a few cooking utensils, and a small stock of the plainest kind of food. When the hours for meals arrived, he would light his lamp, and putting some food over it to cook, would work until all the rest of the hands had left the office, when he would sit down to his frugal repast. He worked incessantly, during working hours, hardly leaving the office, unless to purchase food or upon some errand of that kind.—Morning, noon and night, when I returned from my meals, I invariably found him at the case, working away with all his might, as if some great issue depended upon the improvement of every minute. I suppose he slept upon the cot which he kept in his closet; but as he was always at work when I left at night and when I returned in the morning, I could not positively assert that he did so. I am not very garrulous, especially when employed at the case, and as he would not first address me, I would not speak to him; so, while the fun and jokes were passing round the other cases, we were silent as the grave. I was not long in discovering that there was some mystery connected with him, and that his intense application to labor was not prompted merely by a desire to make money; for if there is anything in phrenology, from the formation of his head, he was the very one whom I would have selected from a score for a spendthrift. Occasionally his cheek would flush, his eyes lift up, and a happy smile overspread his features: then the smile would go away, his eyes would fill with tears, while an expression of sadness—almost despair—would seat itself upon his countenance. I had been tempted a thousand times to ask him the cause of this, but as he appeared so cold and isolated, I refrained from doing so, as it is not pleasant proffering sympathy unasked.

Well, how do you like your neighbor? asked one of the journeymen of me, as we were descending the stairs one evening.

I can hardly make him out, said I; he appears to be a strange sort of being. You are better acquainted with him than I; how do you like him?

For my part, I hate him; and what is more, he has not a friend in the whole office. The fellow has been here three months, and he has hardly spoken to any one. A man who makes such bills as he does, and hoards up all his money like a miser, I have very little friendship for. We would'nt any of us care much if he would be a little sociable, and spend a dollar, even a dime occasionally; but no—every five cent piece he hangs on to it as if he was afraid the eagle on it would spread his wings and fly away with it; doing him out of a five cent piece. But he can't stay here long. We'll get him into a quarrel, and then have him discharged.

But, said I, do you know anything about his history? He may have some all-absorbing end to be accomplished, which is the cause of his untiring assiduity. You should have a little charity for the fellow, and taking Crocket's motto, "be sure you're right before you go ahead."

No, we know nothing of him; and if circumstances are as we suppose, it will be his own fault if they are discovered too late, for we have tried often enough to scrape an acquaintance with him. You had better not take up on his side if you do not wish to incur the displeasure of the whole office.—Good night.

I had some charity for the fellow, and was resolved to see him righted should he get in to difficulty. I soon saw that he was very unpopular, and that, as I felt rather disposed to make allowances for him, was considered his friend. Many were the jokes cracked at our expense; whenever the "Quaker corner" (as the place occupied by us had been dubbed) was mentioned, an universal titter ran round the office. Those little things irritated me some, but as I was not the principal object at whom these arrows were aimed, I resolved to forbear and let him be the first one to speak.

I say, fellow, said a rowdy looking customer, who went by the name of 'Zeke,' do Quakers ever have camp-meetings?

Yes, answered another, they have a camp-meeting over there in Quaker corner every night. That fellow camps out upon the floor every nap he takes.

Well, said another, I have heard of boarding at the market house, and sleeping on the bridge, but I never saw an illustration of it before.

Wonder if they wouldn't take in boarders? asked the first speaker. I'll see if they don't want the rules and regulations of the house printed; if they do, I'll board out the bill.

I glanced at my neighbor to see how he bore this ridicule. His face was flushed and his lips tightly compressed as if to choke down the rising indignation. But he said not a word; I fancied, however, that he picked up type faster than usual.

Things could not go on in this way much longer, for as god-like a quality as forbearance is, it cannot hold out against everything. I saw that a storm was gathering, and prepared to act my part as a man when it burst forth.

It was Saturday afternoon; the hands were all ranged round the "stone" with their bills, waiting to be paid off. Quaker happened to be at one end of the stone, and immediately opposite to him stood Zeke. As usual, Quaker "was the observed of all observers," and sly whispers, which were answered by a titter or nudge of the elbow, passed round the group. As the foreman paid Quaker the amount due him, he gave him a quarter of a dollar to make out the change. This did not escape Zeke's eyes, and he said in a tone to be heard by all:

If the eagle on that quarter had life, and I were a States-prison convict, I wouldn't swap places with it, for my confinement would be far more preferable to being squeezed to death.

This was the hair that broke the camel's back. With the exclamation—"You scoundrel," he made one bound, and with a stunning blow, brought Zeke to the floor. Then jerking off his coat, and placing himself in a fighting attitude, he turned to the astonished group, with, "Come on now, you cowardly ruffians." If you cannot let me alone peaceably, I will make you do it by force. I have borne your insults long enough, and if you have any more to offer, come on with them!

This challenge was sufficient. Coats came off and sleeves were rolled up in a minute. I saw that my friend would be apt to get the worst of the fight, and forcing him into a corner, I exclaimed:

Gentlemen, one word if you please! It would be cowardly for you all to attack this man; I will not see it done. And if you will attempt it, I have something here (tapping my breast significantly) that will stop it. He is not to blame; he has resented an insult, which any of you would have done. You have all insulted him because he has conducted himself strangely; let him explain his conduct, and perhaps we can make up the quarrel. He owes you an explanation—if not to you, he certainly does to me. And now, sir, said I, turning to him, I demand it of you as a right.

He hesitated a moment.

Come, my friend, said I, let us have it, whatever it is, and at once put an end to this quarrel.

Well, gentlemen, he said, I am not disposed to lay my private affairs open to public gaze, but suppose I must do it for once. You must know, then, that from my earnings, I must not only support myself, but my mother, two sisters, and three small brothers, who reside in a distant state. I could earn enough at home to support them well, but my reason for coming here is this: One of my sisters, who is now a beautiful girl of sixteen, and the pet of the family, has been blind from her birth. We had no hope of her ever acquiring the faculty of sight, and were content to abide by what we thought a dispensation of Providence. But recently I have seen a case similar to hers—a young man—who was restored to sight by an eminent physician of Paris. I have corresponded with that physician, and he has high hopes that in my sister's case he can effect a cure. This, gentlemen, is what I have been laboring for since I have been here—to raise funds sufficient to take her to Paris. I love that sister as I love my own life; I have deprived myself of many comforts, and borne your taunts and jeers for her sake. But I can bear it no longer. If you are men, you will desist; if you do not, I warn you of the consequences.

Zeke had risen to his feet and heard all my friend had said. As he listened to the Quaker, I could see the moisture coming to his eyes; and when he had finished, he stepped forward, and grasping Quaker's hand, while the tears trickled down his face, he said in a low voice, quivering with emotion:

My noble fellow, we have wronged you, deeply, and I for one ask your forgiveness. Had you but told us what your object was, we would not have placed a single obstacle in your way.

I forgive you freely, sir; I forgive you, all, said Quaker.

And how much have you to raise yet, I asked, before you have the requisite sum?

About one hundred and fifty dollars. If I have my health, and continue to make good bills, I shall be ready to start for Europe in about two months.

You won't have to wait that long, said Zeke, laying the money he had in his hand upon the stone; if my week's wages, every cent of which you are welcome to, will help you along any. Come boys, he added, how many of you will follow suit?

Well, there's mine, said Jim, laying an X upon the pile; and mine, and mine, and mine, said a dozen voices, as each hand deposited an equal amount, and they had made quite a pile of bank bills.

There stranger, take that, and may God prosper you, said Zeke, tendering him the money.

No, gentleman, answered the Quaker, I thank you for your liberality, but I cannot take your money. I am no beggar; all I ask is, that I may be allowed to do my work without being disturbed.

But you must take it, urged Zeke, growing warm, we owe it to you, and you shall take it. We've done you a great wrong—we've abused you—and have no other way of making amends. Besides, if you don't take it, it will be spent before Monday morning, and I know that for my part, it will be much pleasanter to commence the week with the consciousness of having appropriated my money in a suitable way than with a foggy-head, aching limbs, and empty pockets, which always follow a "Free and Easy."

Still the stranger hesitated.

Take it—take it for your sister's sake, said three or four voices.

I accept it, gentlemen, said the Quaker, as you say, for my sister's sake, and I hope some day to return it principal and interest.

Quaker left for Paris shortly after; and in a few months we had the satisfaction of hearing that his sister was completely restored to sight, and that they were on their way home.

I have heard from him several times since. His lines have been drawn in pleasant place; and he is now a judicial functionary in a neighboring state—Kentucky.

Ladies Travelling.

Our wives and daughters lose three-fourths of the pleasure of summer travel, by the inexcusable, the execrable perversion of true taste and common sense, in dressing for a rail car or a steamboat, as if they were going to a court reception. It does seem that they have no more sense of the fitness of things than idiots.

Cannot some few gentlemen have their own way for once, and thereby set the fashion by dressing in the families for a summer travel in plain, substantial garments, allowing no member anything beyond what a small carpet bag would contain, and which should be the sole article which each one was to take care of. Let us all "put ourselves upon our behavior," and not on our dress. The fact is, the clerks and proprietors of hotels, the captains of steamboats, and the conductors of railroads, see at the very first glance, the real status of a traveller; the dullest chambermaid, the most stupid cabin boy, and the laziest waiter, are neither dull, nor stupid, nor lazy, nor erring either, in the estimate they make of people, as if by intution. At "first sight," they don't see the dazzling watch chain; the fancy vest; the shiney hat; the point lace veil; the embroidered handkerchief; the cashmere shawl; the thousand dollar dress, and boundless crinoline; it is that presence which the face and features and countenance diffuse around, sustained by a gait, and manner, and modulation of voice, which the brightest of them can never describe, but which the meanest intellect of them all, cannot help but see and feel, at the instant of a first glance.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Is Mars Inhabited?

The opponents of the doctrine of the plurality of worlds allow that a greater probability exists of Mars being inhabited than in the case of any other planet. His diameter is four thousand one hundred miles; and his surface exhibits spots of different hues; the seas, according to accurate observations, appearing to be green, and the land red. The variety in spots, it is thought, may arise from the planet not being destitute of atmosphere and cloud; and what adds greatly to the probability of this, is the appearance of brilliant white spots at its poles, which have been conjectured to be snow, as they disappear when they have long been exposed to the sun, and are the greatest when emerging from the long night of their polar winter, the snow line then extending to about six degrees from the pole. The length of the day is almost exactly twenty-four hours, the same as that of the earth. Continents and oceans, and green savannas, have been observed upon Mars, and the snow of the polar regions has been seen to disappear with the heat of summer. Clouds may actually be seen floating in the atmosphere of the planet, and there is the appearance of land and water on his disc.

Treatment of the Hair.

If the ladies will trust to our science on the subject of hair, in the first place we can assure them, most confidently, that so far is it from being true that oils and pomatum, increase the lustre of the hair, their effect is to diminish that polish which it naturally possesses; while, whatever gloss they may give to hair which is dull, is false, and, like all other falsities, disgusting. Absolute cleanliness, by means of water alone, to commence, followed by brushing in the direction of the hair itself, in a dry state, is the true method of giving to the hair all the polish of which it is susceptible; and it is the effect of oils of all kinds to disturb or injure this; to say nothing of the disgust and necessary dirtiness of greasy hair. It is the effect of oils also to prevent it from curling, and this object is most effectually obtained, without artificial means, by curling it when wet, and suffering it to dry in that state. And as it happens that all hair has a tendency to curl in one direction rather than in another, it is useful to study that tendency, so as to conform to it in the artificial flexture given. As to artificial applications, the whole of the so-called curling fluids are mere impositions; while one, which is really effectual, and at the same time inoffensive, is a weak solution of isinglass, by which a very firm and permanent form can be given to the hair.

Some Childish Ideas of Things.

A devoted Christian woman was instructing her little nephew in serious things, and showed him a picture in Fox's Book of Martyr's, where Christians were being torn to pieces by lions in the amphitheatre. The child looked on for some time in silence and evident sympathy, when all of a sudden he exclaimed: see that poor little lion; he can't get any.

What are you doing? asked a mother of her little girl. Playing school, was the reply. But it is Sunday to-day. I know it, said the child, so I am playing Sunday school.

A mother was instructing her daughters in the duty of prayer, and the sure answers given to believers; and proceeded to repeat the Lord's Prayer. When she came to the clause, Give us this day our daily bread, the little one broke out, with, Oh, mother, say cake, say cake.

A young woman was examining a class in a Sunday School; bowing to a lad of large size, she put the question, Who made you? He could not tell. She then asked a little lad, who replied, God made me. She proceeded to reprove the overgrown boy for his inability to answer a question, which was so readily done by one not half his size; when he braced himself up pompously and said, I should think he might know, tain't but a little while since he was made.

A lady asked a little two year old, Who gives you your daily bread? Dod, replied the child, but uncle Peter puts the sugar on.

In a school, in Baltimore, the boys were reading from their class-books a story of returning good for evil. Phillip had accidentally dropped his cane, a present from his father, upon Robert's pitcher, filled with water, and Robert refusing to hear his apology, broke the cane in pieces. Some time afterward, Phillip found Robert lying beneath a log of wood which had fallen on him. He very kindly lifted it off, and assisted him home, thus returning good for evil, or as Solomon has it, "heaping coals of fire on his head." Now, see boys, said the teacher, what a noble little fellow Phillip must have been. Now, what would you have done, Johnny, if your cane should be broken by another boy? Little Johnny arose from his seat, and doubled his fists, while his eyes flashed as he said, I would lam him so bad that he could not stand.

Extemporaneous Preaching.

Once two ministers of the Gospel were conversing on extemporaneous preaching. Well, said the old divine, (waxing warm) you are ruining yourself for writing your sermons, and then reading them off. Your congregation cannot become interested in your preaching, and if you were called upon to preach unexpectedly, unless you could get hold of an old sermon, you would be completely confused.

The young divine used all his eloquence, but all in vain, to convince the old gentleman that the written sermons expressed his own thoughts and feelings, and if called upon could preach extemporaneously.

As we are of the same faith, said the young minister, suppose you try me next Sabbath morning. On ascending the pulpit, you can hand me a text from any part of the Bible, and I will convince you that I can preach without having looked at the text before I stood up. Likewise, I must be allowed the same privilege with you, and see who makes the best of it.

The idea seemed to delight the old gentleman, and it was immediately agreed upon.

The following Sabbath, on mounting the pulpit, his senior brother handed him a slip of paper, on which was written, "And the ass opened its mouth and spake;" from which he preached a glorious sermon, chaining the attention of his delighted hearers, and charming his old friend with his eloquence.

In the afternoon, the young brother, who was sitting below the pulpit, handed his slip up. After raising, and opening his Bible, the old man looked anxiously around the congregation, and read nervously aloud: "Am I not thine ass?" Pausing a few minutes, he ran his fingers through his hair, straightened his collar, blew his nose like the last trumpet, and re-read aloud, "Am I not thine ass?" Another pause, in which a deadly silence reigned. After reading a third time, "Am I not thine ass?" he looked over the pulpit at his friend, and in a doleful voice, said,—"I think I am, brother."

Whining.

There is a class of persons in the world, by no means small, whose prominent peculiarity is whining. They whine because they have not health to enjoy their riches; they whine because it is too shiny; they whine because they have no luck and others prosperity exceeds theirs; they whine because some friend has died and they are still living; they whine because they have aches and pains, and have aches and pains because they whine, and they whine no one can tell why. Now, I would like to say a word to those whining persons.

FIRST—stop whining! It is of no use—this everlasting complaining, fretting, scolding, fault-finding and whining. Why, you are the most deluded set of creatures that ever lived. Do you not know that it is a well settled principle of physiology and common sense, that these habits are more exhaustive of nervous vitality than almost any other violation of physiological law? And do you not know, too, that life is pretty much as you take it and make it? You can make it bright sunshining, or you can make it dark shadowing. This life is meant only to be discipliuary—to fit us for a higher and purer state of being. Then stop whining and freting, and 'go on your way rejoicing.'

SECOND. Sing the song of life cheerily. Hark! Do you hear yonder bird singing its merry carols, as it hops from bough to bough in its native forest home? Imitate it! Take up your song of life, using it joyously and bravely. Sing on, though you feel it not.

You are miserable, nervous dyspeptics, in wrong relations, to yourselves and all God's universe, and that's all ails you. Then stop short, take up the song of life, and leave off forever that whine of death.

Fashionable Women.

Fashion kills more women than toil or sorrow. Obedience to fashion is a greater transgression of the laws of woman's nature, a greater injury to her physical and mental constitution, than the hardships of poverty and neglect. The slave-woman at her task will live and grow old, and see two or three generations of her mistresses fade and pass away. The washerwoman, with scarce a ray of hope to cheer her in her toils, will live to see her fashionable sisters all extinct. The kitchen-maid is hearty and strong, when her lady has to be nursed like a sick baby. It is a sad truth that fashionable pampered women are almost worthless for all the good ends of life. They have but little force of character; they have still less power of moral will, and quite as little physical energy. They live for no great purpose of life—they accomplish no great ends, They are dolls, to form in the hands of milliners and servants, to be dressed and fed to order. They dress nobody, they bless nobody, they save nobody. They write no books; they set no rich examples of virtue and womanly life. If they rear children, servants and nurses do all, save to conceive and give them birth. And when reared, what are they? What do they ever amount to but weak scions of the old stock? Who ever heard of a fashionable woman's child exhibiting any virtue and power and mind for which it became eminent? Read the biographies of our great and good men and women. Not one of them had a fashionable mother. They nearly all sprang from strong-minded women who had about as little to do with fashion as the changing clouds.

Heart Disease.

When an individual is reported to have died of a "Disease of the Heart," we are in the habit of regarding it as an inevitable event, as something which could not have been foreseen or prevented, and it is too much the habit, when persons suddenly fall down dead, to report the "heart" as the cause; this silences all enquiry and investigation, and saves the trouble and inconvenience of a repulsive "post mortem." A truer report would have a tendency to save many lives. It is through a report of "disease of the heart," that many an opium eater is let off into the grave, which covers at once his folly and his crime; the brandy drinker too, quietly slides round the corner thus, and is heard of no more; in short this "report" of "disease of the heart," is the mantle of charity, which the politic coroner and the sympathetic physician throw around the grave of "genteel people."

At a late scientific congress at Strasburg, it was reported, that of sixty-six persons who had suddenly died, an immediate and faithful post mortem showed that only two persons had any heart affection, whatever; one sudden death only, in thirty-three, from disease of the heart. Nine out of the sixty-six died of apoplexy, one out of every seven; while forty-six, more than two out of three, died of lung affections, half of them of "congestion of the lungs," that is the lungs were so full of blood they could not work, there was not room for air enough to get in to support life.

It is then of considerable practical interest to know some of the common every day causes of this "congestion of the lungs," a disease which, the figure above being true, kills three times as many persons at short warning, as apoplexy and heart disease together. Cold feet; tight shoes; tight clothing; costive bowels; sitting still until chilled through and through after having been warmed up by labor or a long or hasty walk; going too suddenly from a close heated room, as a lounger or listener or speaker, while the body is weakened by continued application, or abstience, or heated by the effort of a long address; these are the fruitful, the very fruitful causes of sudden death in the form of "congestion of the lungs;" but which being falsely reported as "disease of the heart," and regarded as an inevitable event throws people off their guard instead of pointing to the true causes, all of which are avoidable, and very easily so as a general rule, when the mind has been once intelligently drawn to the subject.—Dr. W. W. Hall.

Galileo.

In 1682, Galileo, then a youth of eighteen, was seated in church, when the lamps suspended from the roof were replenished by the sacristan, who, in doing so, caused them to oscillate from side to side, as they had done hundred of times before, when similarly disturbed. He watched the lamp, and thought be perceived, that while the oscillations were dimnishing, they still occupied the same time. The idea thus suggested never departed from his mind, and fifty years afterwards, he constructed the first pendulum; and thus gave to the world one of the most important instruments for the measure of time. Afterwards, when living at Venice, it was reported to him one day, that the children of a poor spectacle maker, while playing with two glasses, had observed, as they expressed it, that things were brought nearer by looking through them in a certain position. Everybody said how curious, but Galileo seized the idea, and invented the first telescope.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, July 9th, 1859.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

THE FOURTH—was celebrated here, with the usual demonstrations, although in a quiet, but not less acceptable manner. The "Mowing Bee" fete, came off in the morning, according to previous arrangement, amid the congratulations of about fifty of the stalwart and strong of our citizens, who had assembled at the residence of Captain Newcombs to take part in the glorious work, and enjoy his hospitality. The work was done—and well done. We heard a veteran at our elbow, remark, while bending over the festive board to whet his scythe for the fourth or fifth time, that in all his experience, he never knew men before that could cut such big swathes. It was the twenty-third anniversary, of the time-honored custom, and passed off nobly. In the afternoon, the Hook and Ladder Company celebrated the day, at their pleasant quarters, with sentiment and song, and over a repast which done honor to the occasion. The evening's amusements were equally attractive; rockets and other juvenile missiles were being let off at every corner of our streets—and the south plains were made brilliant, by a rich display of fireworks,—the liberal offering of a few high-minded citizens of that part of the town, and which were enjoyed by quite a concourse of people. Before closing this article, we may be pardoned for mentioning a circumstance, which added to the enthusism, and in which we feel some little interest. On the eve of the 4th, a small out-building, such as are usually appended to all well-regulated mansions, was removed, by hands unknown, from its rightful premises, and placed on the Green, in front of the Stone Church,—embellished with certain devices, no doubt picked up on the way. Among the number, might be seen the sign of the Patriot office, that of our neighbor, the milliner, across the way, also the ticket office of the Depot Master, Mr. Gay, with directions for Western travellers, etc., etc.; they were so arranged, as to lead to the conclusion, that artificial flowers and the latest Parisian fashions would be for sale in the attic, or upper story, that on the first floor, all kinds of ornamental job printing would be faithfully executed, in fancy color, etc., and that the basement would be occupied by our friend Gay, for the sale of tickets and the transaction of all business connected with the Old Colony Railroad. It was a joke that took well—pleased the multitude—and as no harm was done, we secretly congratulated ourselves that if we had in the smallest degree been instrumental in contributing to the hilarity of the day, we were satisfied.

FIRE. The roof of the Stone Church, at the Railway Village, Milton, took fire on the afternoon of the Fourth, from what cause we have not learned, and was somewhat injured. The Granite Engine Company was promptly on hand, as usual, and probably saved the building from destruction. The interior of the Church was somewhat injured by water, finding its way through a leakage on the roof.

PERSONAL. Among the passengers who left New York, on Tuesday last, in the steamer for California, was our young townsman, Mr. Joseph W. Sanborn, jr., who goes to join his father, Joseph W. Sanborn, Esq., formerly a well known citizen of North Quincy, in business, at Benecia; at which place he has resided for many years, and has taken a high position in society at Benecia.

Our young friend carries with him the best wishes of his numerous acquaintances here, for a pleasant voyage to the residence of his father, and prosperity in business. We have many esteemed friends, formerly of Quincy, now in California, where the Patriot is regularly forwarded to numerous subscribers.

THANKS. We are again called upon to return our grateful acknowledgments to our friend and fellow citizen, Thomas Newcomb, Esq., for the kind manner in which he has seen fit to remember us. The box of cherries, (ox-hearts) which he forwarded us, was truly a grateful present. In size and beauty, they were fair to behold, and to the taste, most delicious. May our friend ever be found rich in the best fruits of the season, and in the enjoyment of health and prosperity.

Boston Correspondence.

BOSTON, July 7, 1859.

Business inactive.—Money stringent.—Poor prospects ahead. Independence in Boston.—The Oration.—Scene at Faneuil Hall.—General Palfrey.—Geo ge Summer.

I wish I could speak of any signs of business reaction. Nothing, the present moment, justifies any good prospects. In fact, to use a common phrase, money matters are slowly, but surely, hardening, from day to day, both inside and outside the banks. The cause is rightly attributed to the frightful export of specie, brought about by excessive imports for foreign goods and very limited demands for our exports. The drain of specie from New York and Boston to Europe within six months, has been nearly, or quite, $40 000,000 either in gold or silver.

At this rate, what are we coming to, who depend upon the facilties of bank loans? So long as the European war continues on the present scale, extensive imports of foreign goods will come to our country, whether ordered or not, for the purpose of exchanging with all the specie we can rake and scrape; gold and silver being the sinews of war, the sine qua non to carry on wholesale fighting. The week closes in our money market, rather discouragingly to all classes of business men.

The dull times, have evidently not marred the pleasure that usually attends the anniversary of our National Independence. The celebration of the glorious Fourth was carried out on a grand scale in Boston. The parade of the "Odds and Ends," early in the morning; the grand Military Concert on the Common; the City Procession and Military Escort; the Balloon Ascensions; the Children's Celebration: Regattas and Fire Works of the evening, were attractions sufficient to bring the largest number of people together from the suburban towns, known to the memory of man. Space will not allow me to comment on any of these magnificent displays; suffice it to say, the people were very happy; a good deal of money was spent foolishly; and not a few felt the influence of king alchohol's bowl, particularly towards the shades of evening.

The oration of George Sumner, Esq., before the Municipal Authorities and a large audience, was received with much enthusiasm. The first part of his address was highly complimentary to France and Spain, for the aid, the great aid, they offered our infant Colonies in their struggles to throw off their allegiance with Great Britian. It is well known that France was an open ally to us, and that our Independence was hastened by her noble efforts in our cause. But we are told in this able address, that the Spanish Ministry warmly sympathized for us; and when the Declaration of the 4th of July, reached Madrid, public notice was immediately made, that in the Spanish ports, the new flag of America was as free and as welcome, as was the old and haughty flag of England. "This was not the end" (says Mr. Sumner of Spanish favors); "blankets for ten regiments were sent as a present to Congress, through John Langden, of Portsmouth; ship loads of military stores were dispatched; and on John Jay appearing at Madrid, as Minister of the new States, without any provision being made by Congress for money to pay even his house rent, another gift of $150.000 in hard cash was made to him for us." He pays a just compliment to Florida Blanca, who then held the reins of power in Spain, assisting us in every way with money and ships, and his great influence with other powers. Mr. Sumner informs us that one of our wisest statesmen, John Adams, attributed no small share of gratitude, for the blessing of peace and Independence to the armed neutrality of Southern Europe—conceived by that eminent man and friend of liberty, Florida Blanca, the Minister of Spain. He ranks Spain as second in her exertions, of all European nations, for our Independence; and for her aid by an armed neutrality, we have reason to honor and thank her. Let us remember her past friendship, and now in return, be just and generous, when she is feeble, and we mighty, in any measures for the acquisition of the fairest jewel in the Spanish Crown, the Island of Cuba.

Mr. Sumner evidently sympathizies with France and Italy in the war against Austria, and gives his reasons at length.

The peroration is a condemnation of the "Dred Scott Decision" by the Supreme Court of the United States, "converting the temple of Justice into another Tammany Hall, and the Supreme Bench into a caucus platform." He is severe on Judge Taney, in particular, and compliments Judge Curtis, the most learned of the Bench, in high terms, for his dissenting opinion. It is questionable whether such language, however just, may be proper at a celebration, without distinction of political parties; but every man has a right to express his political opinions, while regard should be made to the time and place of expressing them. At the dinner, in Faneuil Hall, a pleasant passage-at-arms, occurred between General Palfrey, a resident of New Orleans, for forty-nine years, now on a visit to Boston, his native city. Mr. Palfrey remarked, that he considered it a hard case that he could not come to Boston, a native of the city as he was, without hearing the sentiments which he had heard that day, in defiance of the laws and the judiciary; referring to Mr. Sumner's views on the Dred Scott Decision. Mr. Sumner, in reply said, this is Faneuil Hall, and this is the city of Boston. I congratulate him, (General Palfrey) on being where every man is free to express his opinions In so much of what I had the honor to say this day in another place, as regards events in our own country, I am supported by Jefferson, by Hamilton, by Story, and by the great Jurist of Louisiana, Edward Livingston—with them, I am content to stand or fall.

Health, what is it? Disease, what is it?

MR. EDITOR:—In support of "ideas" that Pro Aris considers "rapidly gaining ground," he admits that "the way to cure disease is by regulating and assisting the natural efforts by supplying healthful conditions." Exactly so, and exactly the truth acted upon by Hippocrates and Sydenham, and from their days down to the venerable James Jackson, John Ware, and every well-educated practitioner of sound and rational Therapeutics of these times.

Therefore, without bowing himself to the dust, as it is said Hahnneman did when he discovered and proclaimed to a sinful world, that diseases sprang from Sycosis, or the itch, would Pro Aris give to us a useful definition of the terms health and disease; it may be found, after all, that on these two points, also, he is "sound on the goose."

Let us, then, all be kind and clever to him, so that by the simple process of cause to effect, a happy reaction may ensue, and his passion for fight, spunk and gumption, become subordinate to the exercise of reason and judgment, and prove only useful to the intellectual system, as good wine, and sometimes high food, to the material.

OBSERVER.

Bath, (Me.) June 28th, 1859.

For the Patriot.

The Whole Truth.

MR. EDITOR:—In your last paper, "W" undertakes to set you right on the subject of the Bookmakers' Strike; but though he is correct in what he states as to wages, he does not tell the whole truth. "W" is right when he states that some of the employers pay more wages, than the Society rates. You are also right when you state that the strike is to redress certain grievances.

The only object of a trade society is to protect the interests of the journeymen, against the encroachments which employers are only too ready to make; and to be effective, a trade society must consist of all who work as journeymen at the same branch of trade. It is the interest of all the men, without exception, to be united; it is the interest of the Boss to have the men divided into as many parties as there are men.

When the bootmakers struck last year for wages, they found quite a number of men who were willing to continue to work for low wages, for fear that the Bosses would be put out with them, and it was only when the members of the Society refused to work with them, that they joined the Society. The same cry was then raised that is now, and with the same effect.

Some people say that the Society is unreasonable in their demands; there are two sides to that question.

There are in this town some two hundred and odd sewed workmen—probably as good mechanics as could be picked through the United States. They have for the first time in this town established a uniform rate of wages, which gives to the men a fair equivalent for their labor, and is so satisfactory to the Bosses, that they pay, in some instances, more than is demanded. To keep this up and prevent advantage from being taken of the men, they continue their organization, at considerable trouble and expense to themselves. From this organization some fifteen or twenty men wish to keep aloof. They accept all the benefit, but refuse to discharge the duties of a society; or take any of the trouble or expense which must be incurred in keeping a society in working order. Is this fair or reasonable?

The most curious feature in this strike is, the men who were most urgent in forcing this question on the society, were some of the first who went in on the strike. Was it from principle, or was it for a Con-si-de-ration.

BOOTMAKER.

"MY MOTHER'S SALVE," is now sought after by all classes, as it is known to be far superior to any other ointment ever introduced to the public. For burns, pimples, sores, sore eyes, etc., a cure is produced by a few applications. See advertisement.

"DAN RICE'S GREAT SHOW" IS HERE TO-DAY. The Grand Spectacular Procession will take place in the Afternoon. 'Dan Rice,' 'The Trained Rhinoceros,' 'The Dancing Elephant,' 'The Educated Mules,' and all the other wonders of this most wonderful of shows, will appear both Afternoon and Evening. Ladies and children will get the best seats by visiting the Afternoon show.

SELLING OFF. A grand chance is offered to the Ladies for one fortnight to buy millinery. Mrs. Kenison is selling off her Summer Millinery at very low prices.

CIVILITIES. We learn that Granite Engine Company of this town, went to Railway Village, on the morning of the 4th, and after playing from the reservoir in that vicinity, were kindly entertained, in a sumptuous manner, by George Adams, Esq., whose generosity on the occasion is worthy of all praise, and will long be remembered by the members of the noble-hearted Granite.

CLAM CHOWDER. This delectable compound, will be ready for customers at an early hour; and as there will be many persons in town, to-day, to witness Dan. Rice's exhibition, L. A. French, at his Saloon, on Washington street, will be full of epicurean admirers, who will seek a bowl of his excellent Clam Chowder.

VALUABLE ADVICE. Preserve your natural teeth. If they are decayed, have them filled; if they are gone, have new ones; if old roots offend and annoy, have them out; and the place to have it done, and well done, at a reasonable price, is at the Dental Rooms of Dr. Stocking, No. 19, Tremont Row, Boston.

Deaths.

In Danvers Centre, on the 27th ult., Anna W., youngest child of Mr. Augustus and Mrs. Lucy A. Mudge, aged 1 year and 15 days.

Another fair flower has faded from earth,
Another transplanted in Heaven;
Another dear lamb is enfolded in the arms
Of the Saviour, from who it was given.

Three litle buds have been before,
Thus rudely torn from the parent stem,
And now another has joined that throng,
To shine in the Saviour's diadem.

But we cannot lay our darling by,
Oh! say not, that we must;
That doll-like form, that golden hair,
To moulder in the dust.

Yet we would not call her spirit back,
To this cold world of grief and pain,
But we'll try to think what is our loss,
Is to our darling Anna, GAIN.

Then, parents, mourn not for your darlings,
They were but lent, they were not given;
And may their presence hov'ring near you,
But guide you to their home in Heaven.

HARRY HAZEL
— IN THE —
NEW YORK WEEKLY!
THE publishers take pleasure in announcing to the reading world that they have secured the exclusive services of HARRY HAZEL for the NEW YORK WEEKLY, and that his first story will appear in the number for July 2d, which will be out and for sale by all News Agents throughout the United States about the 18th of June.
This THRILLING AND INTERESTING INDIAN ROMANCE is entitled
THE MUTE SPY;
A STORY OF KING PHILLIP'S WAR.
— BY —
HARRY HAZEL,
Author of
"West Point Cadet," "Big Dick," "Middy of the Macedonian," 'Gallant Tom,' 'Yankee Jack,' 'Flying Yankee,' 'Red King,' 'Rebel Brude,' Harry Tempest,' 'Rival Chieftains,' 'Smuggler King,' 'Sylvia Seabury, or Yankees in Japan,' 'Rival Sisters,' 'Nun of St. Ursula,' &c. &c.
It is a remarkable fact, that among the thirty millions of people of this mighty Republic of the New World, there are but few, and those mostly among our learned men, who are in any great degree familiar with the history of the wars of the great Wampanoag Chieftain, King Philip, against the colonists of New England, and their Indian allies, the Mehegans. During this sanguinary struggle, many scenes were enacted of the most startling and thrilling description, and many adventures made by both the white and the red man, almost too wonderful to be believed. Little, indeed, is known of the savage and merciless scenes enacted at Tiverton, Lancaster, Taunton, Dartmouth, Swanzey, Brookfield, Deerfield, Hadley, and other towns of the Colony; and less, much less, is known of the "Massacre of Bloody Brook," an event which struck more terror to the hearts of the colonists, and gave the Indians more courage and confidence, than any event of the war. On the field of Bloody Brook, "The Flower of Essex," a band of nearly a hundred young, enterprising, adventurous men, were attacked by a powerful band of savages, who had been lying in ambush, and indiscriminately butchered before they had an opportunity to make a defence. Eight only escaped to relate the fate of their comrades.—All the rest perished on that bloody plain by the rifles, tomahawks, war-clubs and scalping-knives of a thousand infuriated savages.
The most remarkable scenes and adventures of this most savage war, form the basis of the Indian Romance, by HARRY HAZEL.
The characters portrayed in this work are the men and women of those rude, semi-barbarous days; and in no war, embraced in the history of the Anglo-Saxon or Algonquin races, was there ever more heroism, more devotion, more sacrifices, more hardships, more hellish intrigue, more inhuman acts, more subtlety and treachery, than during the terrible struggle which began in 1661 and ended in 1677, commonly known as "King Philip's War."
The author has selected the most thrilling and interesting events of that sanguinary period, at the same time only those that serve to develope a most ingeniously contrived and mysterious plot—one that cannot fail to enchain the reader's attention until its final development.
Those who have read the previous productions from the pen of HARRY HAZEL, do not require to be told that there is no man living who can compete with him in a story of this character. He stands unrivaled in this class of literature. As one of the leading contributors to the Flag of Our Union, Star Spangled Banner, Yankee Privateer, and other leading publications of the day, for a number of years, he has acquired a popularity that places him in the front rank of American story writers.
☞ Those who desire to secure this great Story by Harry Hazel, complete should send in their orders at once, to enable us to make arrangements to supply them. Wherever there is a News-Agent order through him. We only desire to send the WEEKLY by mail to out-of-way places, where there is no News Dealer.—When sent by mail, the terms are $2 a year, or two copies for $3. Six months' subscription, $1. All orders by mail must be addressed to
STREET & SMITH, Proprietors,

N. B.—News Agents should send their orders at once to the wholesale dealers, so as to prevent disappointment.

HARRY HAZEL
— IN THE —
NEW YORK WEEKLY!

THE publishers take pleasure in announcing to the reading world that they have secured the exclusive services of HARRY HAZEL for the NEW YORK WEEKLY, and that his first story will appear in the number for July 2d, which will be out and for sale by all News Agents throughout the United States about the 18th of June.

This THRILLING AND INTERESTING INDIAN ROMANCE is entitled

THE MUTE SPY;

A STORY OF KING PHILLIP'S WAR.
— BY —
HARRY HAZEL,
Author of

"West Point Cadd," "Big Dick," "Middy of the Macedonian," 'Gallant Tom,' 'Yankee Jack,' 'Flying Yankee,' 'Red King,' 'Rebel Brade,' Harry Tempest,' 'Rival Chieftains,' 'Smuggler King,' 'Sylvia Seabury, or Yankees in Japan,' 'Rival Sisters,' 'Nun of St. Ursula,' &c. &c.

It is a remarkable fact, that among the thirty millions of people of this mighty Republic of the New World, there are but few, and those mostly among our learned men, who are in any great degree familiar with the history of the wars of the great Wampanoag Chieftain, King Philip, against the colonists of New England, and their Indian allies, the Mchegans. During this sanguinary struggle, many scenes were enacted of the most startling and thrilling description, and many adventures made by both the white and the red man, almost too wonderful to be believed. Little, indeed, is known of the savage and merciless scenes enacted at Taverton, Lancaster, Taunton, Dartmouth, Swanzey, Brookfield, Deerfield, Hadley, and other towns of the Colony; and less, much less, is known of the "Massacre of Bloody Brook," an event which struck more terror to the hearts of the colonists, and gave the Indians more courage and confidence, than any event of the war. On the field of Bloody Brook, "The Flower of Essex," a band of nearly a hundred young, enterprising, adventurous men, were attacked by a powerful band of savages, who had been lying in ambush, and indiscriminately butchered before they had an opportunity to make a defence. Eight only escaped to relate the fate of their comrades.—All the rest perished on that bloody plain by the rifles, tomahawks, war-clubs and scalping-knives of a thousand infuriated savages.

The most remarkable scenes and adventures of this most savage war, form the basis of the Indian Romance, by HARRY HAZEL.

The characters portrayed in this work are the men and women of those rude, semi-barbarous days; and in no war, embraced in the history of the Anglo-Saxon or Algonquin races, was there ever more heroism, more devotion, more sacrifices, more hardships, more hellish intrigue, more inhuman acts, more subtlety and treachery, than during the terrible struggle which began in 1661 and ended in 1677, commonly known as "King Philip's War."

The author has selected the most thrilling and interesting events of that sanguinary period, at the same time only those that serve to develope a most ingeniously contrived and mysterious plot—one that cannot fail to enchain the reader's attention until its final development.

Those who have read the previous productions from the pen of HARRY HAZEL, do not require to be told that there is no man living who can compete with him in a story of this character. He stands unrivaled in this class of literature. As one of the leading contributors to the Flag of Our Union, Star Spangled Banner, Yankee Privateer, and other leading publications of the day, for a number of years, he has acquired a popularity that places him in the front rank of American story writers.

☞ Those who desire to secure this great Story by Harry Hazel, complete should send in their orders at once, to enable us to make arrangements to supply them. Wherever there is a News Agent order through him. We only desire to send the WEEKLY by mail to out-of-way places, where there is no News Dealer.—When sent by mail, the terms are $2 a year, or two copies for $3. Six months' subscription, $1. All orders by mail must be addressed to

STREET & SMITH, Proprietors,
No. 22 Beekman street, New York.

N. B.—News Agents should send their orders at once to the wholesale dealers, so as to prevent disappointment.

Poetry.

Trade Song—The Carpenter.

You know our friend the carpenter;
We hear him all day long;
No lark is ever merrier,
No blither is her song.
Sharp falls his hammer,
Swift slides the plane.
Then the awl, and the chisel,
Then he sings again.

Within his little attic
What little comforts lurk;
He sleepeth there throughout the night,
But at dawn he's up at work.
Then he plies the screw-driver;
Then he drives the plane;
Then he sings thro' his merry meal,
And then he works again.

All the week he is a carpenter,
As busy as the bees;
But on Sunday he's a gentleman,
And then he takes his ease.
Then his tools are laid aside,
And he has welcome rest;
Or he takes the air with her he loves,
With her that loves him best.

And so, long live the Carpenter!
Long live his rosy wife!
May children come and lengthen out
Their happy span of life.
May health and strength ne'er fail him,
From sorrow or from pain;
May he sing and work, with all his heart,
And work and sing again.

Wait.

The evening thickens—it is late;
Wait, wait;
The softening sun is in the West;
Wait, wait a little,
And then thou shall be at rest.

Thine early friends have bowed to fate—
Wait, wait;
The homely souls that loved the best;
Wait, wait a little,
Thou, too, shalt be at rest.

Thy mother, saith thou cometh late!
Wait, wait;
Old man, thou longest for her breast;
Wait, wait a little,
Thou soon shalt be at rest.

Thy friends are gone that came more late—
Wait, wait;
The minds that understood thee best:
Wait, wait a little,
Thou, too, shalt be at rest.

Thy Schiller saith thou comest late!—
Wait, wait,
New friends are well, old friends are best:
Wait, wait a little,
Thou, too, shalt be at rest.

New names are named of wise and great—
Wait, wait;
For thee to quit the stage is best:
Wait, wait a little,
And thou shalt be at rest.

There thou shall see the wise and great—
Wait, wait;
There newest shall not pass for best:
Wait, wait a little,
And thou shalt be at rest.

Earth gave thee comfort in thy state—
Wait, wait;
And comfortably on her breast—
Wait, wait a little—
Thou soon shalt be at rest.

Sunset Thoughts.

We mark the glorious orb of day,
Slow sinking in the sky,
The clouds that meet his parting ray,
Reflected brilliantly.

We gaze enraptured on the scene,
In varied beauty dressed;
And know that every twilight beam,
Has been by God impressed.

Encircled thus and golden fringed,
The clouds of life abound,
The darkest shade oft brightest tinged,
With blessings may be found.

And for this cheering evidence,
Of blessings in disguise,
This proof of guardian Providence,
Let grateful thanks arise.

Nor ever, ever, 'mid life's rays,
So oft in love displayed,
Forget His glorious name to praise,
Who lights the darkest shade.

Anecdotes.

A book-keeper was engaged, but could not get married at the specified time, owing to a want of funds.

The time was fixed, said a friend.

I know it," rejoined he.

Then why were you not married?

Well, said he, looking very serious and approaching his ear confidentially, the fact is, I have got an extension.

A modest young lady desiring a leg of a chicken at table, said she would take that part that ought to be dressed in pantalets.

A gentleman opposite immediately called for that part which usually wears the bustle.

John, said a cockney solicitor to his son, I see you'll never do for an attorney, you have no *h*energy.

Skuse me, father, rep'lied John, what I want is some of your *chicken*ary.

An Irish carriage driver made a very happy and characteristic reply. Pat asked a passenger at a depot if he wanted a carriage.

No, replied the gentleman, I am able to walk?

Then says Pat, may your honor long be able, but seldom willing.

A juryman out West was asked whether in a certain case he had been charged by the presiding judge, when he replied,—

Well, squire, the little fellow that sits up in a pulpit, and kinder bosses it over the crowd, give us a talk, but I don't know whether he charges anything or not.

Health—what it is. Disease—what it is.

MR. EDITOR: To gratify our very "kind and clever" friend Observer, I will endeavor to "give a useful definition of health and disease" adapted to his "intellectual system."

Health depends on the proper development and correct condition and action of all the organs, properties and parts of the body, and may be said to consist in a harmonious condition and action of the system; and the more nearly we conform to natural laws, the better will this state of health be preserved; and the greater will be the vital power to resent encroachments from morbific and disturbing causes, whether ordinary or extraordinary.

Whatever irritates the organs or disturbs their functions, tends to cause disease: and when impurities accumulate in the system or deadly virus or poisons finds its way within the vital domain so as to seriously obstruct the vital machinery, the living system makes a special effort to release itself of their presence; and this effort is proportionate to the vital power and the relative destructive tendency of the poison. This effort is the action of the living organism; vital action to expel poisons or impurities and repair damages. This action is disease. "It is not a foe that attacks us from without, but a friend that defends us from within"; and if death is the result of this vital warfare, it is the fault of the poisonous foe and not of the friendly disease. The peculiar form of disease depends on the relative integrity of the various organs and the kind and quantity of the impurity. If the depurating effort tends towards the skin, it will be called a fever; if toward the bowels, diarrhœa, dysentry, etc. On this very simple and most reasonable theory, all the mysterious problems which have baffled the minds of medical men for three thousand years or more; all forms of diseases, and the modus operandi of all medicines can be rationally explained

But Observer must not be hasty in pronouncing these views "sound." "Doctors disagree" with such new fangled notions. If Hahnemann said the cause of disease is the itch, his disciple, Dr. Babbitt, says it is contagion, or poison, each distinct in itself, and acting in a specific manner, and that remedies act by special affinity for certain constituents of the tissues, thus driving out the disease (or the vital warfare) in some mysterious manner. It is a profound mystery to the medical professian. It confesses its utter ignorance of the essential nature of disease and of the modus operandi of medicines. Dr. B. has not replied since I requested him to explain the modus operandi of any "chemical agent that acts in a definite manner on the living system." Perhaps Observer can explain it. If so, he may make money out of it. Dr. Phillips, of New Haven, offered one hundred dollars to any physician—Hygea-Therapeutic excepted, who would answer correctly—and that under the very nose of the Medical Faculty of Yale College. Dr. Trall offers one thousand dollars in New York city. But it is a singular fact, that no one can be found who will even attempt to explain what is really so simple.

It wouln't be modest nor polite to say the doctors are afraid to discuss this question, which lies at the foundation of all medical science and the successful practice of the healing-art, to say nothing of the relation it bears to their daily bread and butter; but some folks do say so, and—I should think they would.

PRO ARIS.

Miscellaneous.

The Proud Heart Humbled.

"BUT IF YE FORGIVE NOT MEN THEIR TRESPASSES, NEITHER WILL YOUR FATHER FORGIVE YOUR TRESPASSES."

The March night had darkened down upon the little New England village of Ashdale. It was a pretty place in summer, lying between two hills, on whose summits the ash trees lifted their green arms to the sky, all the long, bright days, as if imploring a benediction, or spread them out lovingly over the white houses nestled round the one church below.

But to-night it wore a different aspect. A storm was upon the hills. A little snow and hail was borne upon its wings—but not much. Chiefly it was the force of the rushing winds, shaking the leafless ash trees; hurtling against closed windows, swinging the bell in the old church tower, till it gave forth now and then, a dirge-like peal, as if the dead were tolling their own requiems.

Many homes there were where the wild scene without seemed but to heighten, by the force of the contrast, the blessed calm within; homes where smiling infants slept warm and still, through the twilight, in the soft hush of mother bosoms, and happy children gathered around the knee of father or grandsire, to hear again some simple story; or thoughtful ones looked into the fire, and fashioned from the embers brave castles, in which they were to dwell in the coming time, with, over all, the sunshine of youth and hope. Twenty years from now they would look into the embers again, and see those fair castles, in which they had never come to abide, with ruined windows and blackened walls.

"The twilight of memory over all,
And the silence of death within."

But in one house no stories were to gladden listening—no soft evening hymn hushed slumbering babies to rest—no children's eager eyes looked into the embers. It was the stateliest house, by far, in the little village; a lofty mansion, gleaming white in the trees, with the roof supported by massive pillars. No where did the evening fire burn brighter, but into it looked two old people, worn and sorrowful, with the shadows of grief and time upon their shrivelled faces; two who had forgotten, long ago, their youth's fair castles; who looked back over waste fields of memory, where not even setting sunrays gilded the monuments built to their dead hopss.

They sat there silently. They had sat silently ever since the darkness gathered The lofty, well furnished room, was lighted only by a wood fire's glow, and in the corners strange shadows seemed to gather, beckoning hands and white brows gleaming through the darkness. Toward them, now and then, the wife looked with anxious, searching gaze; then turned back toward the fire, and clasped her hands over the heart that had learned through many trials the hard lessons of patience.

Judge Howard was a stern, self-conceited man. In his native town, where he had passed all his life, none stood higher in public esteem. Towards the poor he was liberal; towards his neighbors just and friendly; yet, for all that, he was a hard man, whose will was iron, whose habits were granite. His wife had come to know this even in her honey-moon. The knowledge was endorsed by her sad, wailing face, her restrained manners.

His daughter Caroline, his only child, had learned it early, and her father became to her almost as much an object of fear as of tenderness.

And yet he loved those two with a strength, weaker, more yielding natures could not have fathomed. When his child was first put into his arms; when her frail helpless hands groped blindly at his own, he felt the strong thrill of father-love sweep over him. For the moment it swelled his soul, irradiated his face, flooded his heart, but did not permanently change or soften his nature. As she grew toward womanhood, and her bright head glancing in her path was the fairest sight earth held, her ringing voice the sweetest music, he never gratified her whims, or always yielded to her reasonable wishes.

At length love came to her. She gave her heart to one whose father Judge Howard had hated. James Huntley and he had been young together, and a feud had arisen between them, which Rufus Howard's stern nature allowed him neither to forget nor forgive. He had yet to learn the lesson, holier than philosophy, loftier than all the teachings of seers and sages, the lesson our Saviour lived, wrought, ay, died to teach, of forgiveness even of our enemies—prayer for those who have despitefuly used us and persecuted us. His former enemy was dead now, but not so the Judge's hate. It had been transmitted, like real estate, to the dead man's heir; and so he forbade his daughter to marry him, and sternly bade her choose between parent and lover. She inherited her father's strong will, and she put her hand in Richard Huntley's, and went forth—she would not have been her father's child if she had not—without a tear.

From that time, for ten years, her name had been a forbidden word. Letters she had written at first during the banishment; but they had been sent back unopened, and for years, no voice or token had come to tell whether she were dead or living. Therefore, the mother looked shudderingly into the shadow-haunted corners, in the long twilights, and almost believed she saw there the face for which her mother's heart had yearned, momently, all these years.

Judge Howard loved his wife too; O, if she had but known it! Every outline of that sad, waiting face, every thread of that silver hair, was dearer to him now than when the bridal rose crowned the girl bride he had chosen, but his lips never soothed away the sadness of that patient face.

It is a terrible night, he said, at length, rousing himself from his long silence. In the pause after his words you could hear how the wind shook the house, groaning among the trees, and sighing along the garden walk.

Yes, a terrible night, his wife answered, with a shudder. God grant no poor soul may be out in it shelterless.

Amen! I would take in my worst enemy on such a night as this.

His worst enemy; but would he have taken in his own child; the daughter with his blood in her veins, fed once at his hearth? If this question crossed the wife's mind she gave it no utterance.

Shall I light the candles, Rufus? she asked meekly.

Yes, it is almost bed-time. I had forgotten how long we were sitting in the dark. I will read now, and then we shall be better in bed.

He drew towards him the Bible which lay between the candles she had lighted; it had been his habit, for years, to read a chapter in it nightly. Somehow, to-night, the pages opened at the beautiful, ever new story, of the "Prodigal Son." Judge Howard read it through calmly, but his hand trembled as he shut the book.

Hannah he began, and then paused, as if his pride were still too strong to permit him to confess himself in the wrong. But soon he proceeded: Hannah, I do suppose that was written for an example to those who should seek to be numbered with the children of God. He is our Father, and his arms are ever open to the wanderer. My heart misgives me sorely about Caroline. She should not have disobeyed me, but—do I never disobey God, and where should I be if He measured out to me such measures as I have measured out to her? O, Hannah, I never felt before how much I needed to be forgiven.

The mother's tears were falling still and fast—she could not answer. There was silence for a moment, and then again the Judge said restlessly—Hannah! and she looked up into his white, moved face.

Hannah, could we find her? Do you think she lives still—our one child?

God knows my husband. Sometimes I think she is dead. I see her face on dark nights, and it wears a look of heavenly peace. In the winds I hear a voice that sounds like hers, she seems trying to tell me she has found rest. But no, no—her face kindled—she is not dead. I feel it in my soul; God will let us see her once more; I am her mother; I shall not die till my kisses have rested on her cheek, my hand touched her hair; I believe I have a promise, Rufus.

God grant it, Hannah.

And after these words they both sat silently, again listening—listening.

They had not heard the door open, but now a step sounded in the hall, and the door of the room where they sat was softly unclosed. They both started up; perhaps they half expected to see Caroline; but it was only their next neighbor, holding by the hand a child. She spake eagerly, in a half confused way, which they did not notice.

This child came to my house, Judge, but I hadn't room to keep her, so I brought her over here. Will you take her in?

Surely, surely. Come here poor child.

Who had ever heard Judge Howard's voice so gentle? The little girl seemed somewhat reassured by it. She crept to his knee, and lifted up her face. The Judge bent over her. Whose were those blue, deep eyes? Where had he seen that peculiar shade of hair, like the shell of a ripe chesnut? Did he not know those small, sweet features, that wistful mouth, the delicate chin? His hands shook.

Whose—whose child are you? What is your name?

Grace, and the girl trembled visibly.

Grace Huntley, said the neighbor's voice, grown somewhat quivering now, Grace Huntley. You cannot help knowing that face, Judge. It is a copy of one which belonged once to the brightest and prettiest girl in Ashdale.

The old man—he looked very old now, shaken by the tempest in his strong heart, as the wind shook the trees outside—drew the child into his bosom, with an eager, hungry look. His arms closed around her as if they could hold her there forever.

My child, my child, burst like a sob from his lips, and then he bent over her silently. At first his wife had stood by in mute amazement, her face almost as white as the cap border which trembled round it. Now a thought pierced her, quick and deep as the thrust sword. She drew near, and looked piteously into the neighbor's eyes.

Is she an orphan—where is her mother?

The Judge heard her, and lifted up his head.

Yes, he cried, where is Caroline? Have pity, and tell me where is Caroline?

Before the woman could answer, an eager voice called:

Here, father, mother, here!

And from the hall where she had been lingering, half in fear, Judge Howard's own child came in. It was the mother's breast to which she clung first; the mother's arms which clasped her with such passionate clinging, and then she tottered forward, and threw herself down at her father's feet.

Forgive me, father, she tried to say, but the Judge would not hear her. The angel had troubled, at length, the deep water of his soul, and the wave of healing overflowed his heart. He saw now, in its true light, the self-will and the unforgiving spirit which had been the sin of his life. He sank upon his knees, his arms enfolding his daughter and her child, and his old wife crept to his side, and knelt beside him, while from his lips, Mrs. Marsh heard, as she closed the door and left the now united family to themselves, this prayer:

"Father, forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who tresspass against us."

Judge Howard had not uttered it before for ten years.

After that night the Judge's mansion was not only the stateliest, but the happiest home in Ashdale. Caroline Huntley had borne as long as she could the burden of weight on her heart, and when it had grown too heavy to be endured, she had started with her child for home. The stage had set them down that stormy night in her native village, and the forgiveness for which she had scarcely dared to hope, had expanded into welcome.

The old people could not again spare their daughter, and they summoned Richard Huntley home. A son, he proved, of whom any father might be proud, and in after years no shadows brooded over the peaceful dwelling, where once more children's feet danced round the hearthfire, and children's fancies built castles in the embers; no shadow until that last darkness came which should be but the night before which will rise the calm morning of eternity.—Watchman and Reflector.

Ancient Tables of Wood.

A very general opinion prevails that the rich folks of ancient days were rather a poor set of fellows in comparison with our modern nabobs; and that they could not afford to buy decent chairs and tables for their parlors. We are also liable to lift up our hands in astonishment at the domestic extravagance sometimes displayed at the present day, and to consider that this is the age superlative of foolish expenditures for fancy bits of household garnishings. We rather think that with all the public self-complacency for modern grandeur, the old Romans would "take the shine" out of us, in the table line at any rate. Pliny states that Cicero once paid about $45,000 for a fancy table of citrus wood, and that one which belonged to King Juba, on being exposed at auction, was knocked down for the nice little sum of $54.000. As Cicero was a Roman lawyer, we would like to know which of his disciples in New York could afford to present such a comfortable table to his amiable spouse at this day.

Among the Greeks and Romans there existed for a period of one hundred and fifty years, a ruling passion to possess beautiful tables of citrus wood, the finer specimens of which were compared to gold for their value. The veins of this wood run in spirals and wavy lines, and these were rich and brilliant in their colors, being a mixture of wine-and-honey colored veins. Its polish without any varnish, was brilliant as glass. It had a fragrant odor, and for this reason it was sometimes employed in religious sacrifices and for statues of the heathen gods.

The principal ornamental woods now used in the manufacture of fine furniture are mahogany, rosewood and black walnut—rosewood being most highly estimated, not because it is finer in the grain than mahogany, but because it has the greatest contrast of colors and is not so monotonous to the eye. In California there are some beautiful colored woods which have not yet been introduced into our cabinet-work; but they, no doubt, will yet find a place in the parlors of our people, if it were upon no other consideration than to afford pleasure from their variety.—A few years ago curly and bird's-eye maple were employed extensively for making chairs and other articles of furniture, but the demand for these woods has almost ceased.—Splendid logs of these kinds of maple, which a few years since would have brought a high price, are now burned for fuel in various portions of our country, there being no demand for them for any other purpose. The peculiar appearance of these woods is now imitated by staining soft timber, which is so much easier worked that cabinet-makers prefer to operate with the imitated rather than the genuine article. Oak has recently come into pretty good repute in chair making, and it is certainly a very good wood for this purpose, but not equal to American bird's-eye maple.—Scientific American.

A Kentucky Egg Eater.

Among the prisoners ushered before the Judge one morning, in a Cincinnati Police Court, was a tall robust, big-boned Kentuckian. He was charged with disorderly conduct. The officer stated that he found him "slashing around" in an eating-house, and arrested him to preserve the peace.

What have you to say to this charge? asked the court

A might, that's sartin, replied the prisoner. You see, squire, I'm a stranger here, from way down in old Kaintuck, and haint larned yer ways. Shall I tell you now how I was kotched?

We shall listen to you, remarked the Judge, who saw he had a character before him and was disposed to let him have vent.

I go five that you're a trump, replied Kentuck. But that's neither here nor thar. I m to tell you how I was kotched.

That's it.

Wall, Squire, I cum to town yesterday. I 'spected not to stay long, so I didn't go to nary a tavern. I got kind 'o hungry tho', so I made a lunge for an eating-house. I sot down to the table and I axed for a dozen and a half of eggs, and the critter who waited on the customers opened his eyes, grinned, an' then fetched them to me. They were good, but I wanted a little mixture. I called for a cold beef-steak—cold, Squire, kase its agin my constitutional principles to eat meat hot. The fellow grinned and said they ain't got any. That kind a riled me, but I kept my temper, an' ordered another dozen and a half of eggs. The chap snickered an' said—

We ain't got no more eggs, old Kentuck, you've eat'em all up.

That set mo bilin, an' I just squashed things for a while. That's the hull on it, Squire, as sure as I am from ole Kaintuck.

Then you considered yourself aggravated by the last remark of the waiter?

Just so.

How do you take your eggs—boiled or fried?

Fried—all the time fried, Squire. Biled eggs, 'specially when they are hard, don't sot well on a feller's stomjack.

Can you eat three dozen of eggs at one meal?

Jist like a knife, an' throw the shells in. All I ax is to have them fried.

You must be fond of eggs?

Now hush, Squire; you're teckin me on a tender p'int.

Is it your practice to 'squash' things when you get riled?

Not commonly. I'll tell you what it are, Squire, this is the first time in my immortal days that I was ever locked in. Let me out, and I'm off for old Kaintuck like a streak.

You are, eh?

Sartin as I am from old Kaintuck.

And you will eat no more of our eggs?

Darn the one, Squire.

Then you can take your hat and start.

You're a hoss—old Kaintuck forever, yelled the Kentucky egg-eater as he strutted out of the court room with the air of a prince, and amidst the hearty laughter of all who had witnessed his trial.

Slips of the Pen.

After all, it is with men as with dinners—the plain and simple ones are those we have recourse to the oftenest, and of which we tire the least.

Creditors and poor relations never call at the right moment.

Scandal is a visitor, who never calls without bringing her work with her.

Abuse of women, like the abuse of wine, only falls on the head of him who indulges in it.

If it is difficult to see any fault in a child, or a book, or a pudding, or any one we love, how is it possible that we should see any in ourselves?

They that laugh at everything, and they that fret at everything, are fools alike.

There is only one objection to persons who "mean well," and that is, they never can find time to carry out their meaning.

It takes four things to make a thorough gentleman. You must be a gentleman in your principles, a gentleman in your tastes, a gentleman in your person, and a gentleman in your manners. No man who does not combine these qualities can be justly named a true gentleman.

The busybody labors without thanks, talks without credit, lives without love, dies without pity—save that some say, "It was a pity he died no sooner."

Advice about Lightning.

It is calculated that at least fifty persons are killed by lightning every year in this country, and as the season has arrived when causalties of this kind are imminent, a few words of advice and caution upon the subject, may serve as a safeguard, if carefully observed.

During the prevalence of a recent thunder storm which visited the town and vicinity of St. Petersburg, Illinois, two men were suddenly killed by a stroke of lightning, which descended the chimney of the house in which they were residing. One of the unfortunate victims was in the act of winding a clock that stood on the mantel-piece, and the other was standing immediately behind him, when both were struck lifeless. Two women were at the same time sitting in the room and escaped injury, as they happened to be seated some distance from the chimney.

When the lightning's flash and thunder's crash are seen and heard almost simultaneously, it is a sign that danger is at hand, and the next bolt may strike the tenement which affords us shelter. To know the place of greatest safety upon such an occasion, is important knowledge. This, science clearly teaches us, and as a faithful monitor, its voice should be heard with attention.

The earth and atmosphere are saturated with electricity, which ordinarily remains in a state of equilibrium. When this condition is disturbed, we have the phenomena of thunder-storms; which is simply an effort of Nature to restore the electric equilibrium between the atmosphere and the earth. The atmosphere in such cases is converted into a huge Leyden jar; the lightning is simply disruptive discharges through the intervening air; and thunder is the sound caused by the violent and sudden compression of the air-producing waves; hence the long continued roll like the discharge of artillery. Lightning is the most subtle and irresistible power of Nature. A single flash can shiver the tall mast of a war-ship, that might bid defiance to a cannonade, or rend the lofty oak of the forest to splinters in an instant; and a single bolt has toppled the tall church spire to the dust in the twinkling of an eye.—What is the puny power of man before such a mighty agent? It is physically frail as a feather or a trembling leaf. Armed in the panoply of science, however, man, like a weak but skilful general, can manœuvre his forces against this otherwise destructive power, and convert danger into comparative safety.

This discovery was made when Franklin proved the identity of lightning and electricity with his little kite. Electricity possesses the peculiar property of flowing quietly along or through what is called "conductors," such as copper, gold, iron, &c; and taking advantage of this, the American philosopher suggested the erection of tall rods of iron or copper on houses and ships, to tap the Leyden jars of the atmosphere, and convey their charges quietly and safely to the earth. This suggestion carried out, has saved thousands of lives, and millions worth of property, hence all houses should be provided with such conductors; but as is the case now, perhaps the great majority of buildings will always be unsupplied with such agencies. In all such cases, it should never be forgotten that the lightning always seeks to pass to the earth by the nearest prominent conductors; hence we have an explanation of the cause why trees, masts of ships, steeples of churches, towers and chimneys, are so often struck, and why the persons referred to above should not have been standing so near the fire-place on the occasion of a thunder-storm which cost them their lives.

In such storms, persons in houses should sit or lie in some place as far distant as possible from the chimney, and the most exposed part of the walls—the middle of the room, if it is large, is the safest locality. Sailors on the sea should keep as far from the masts as possible, and farmers in the field should never seek shelter under trees. Horizontal strokes of lightning sometimes take place, and several persons have been struck while sitting at open windows during thunder-storms. Every window of a room in which persons are sitting, in such cases, should be closed; a flash of the fluid, which would pass through an open window in to an apartment, will be conducted down through the door and wall to the earth, if the window is shut. We have thus given some directions to be followed by all persons during the prevalence of lightning, and we have set forth the science of the question, so that all may not only see the reasonableness of our remarks, but, their seasonableness also.—Scientific American.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, July 16th, 1859.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

Monument to Freeman Hunt.

There has been recently erected in the ancient burial place of this town, agreeable to his last request, near the graves of his beloved mother and sister, a plain and truly characteristic monument of the "poor boy" of Quincy, whose name and that of his unrivalled Merchants' Magazine, became and is still known throughout the civilized world.

The monument is about sixteen feet high, of finely wrought Quincy granite—simple in form—a shaft or obelisk, standing on a very gracefully curved base, which is ornamented with deep grooves after the French style of rusticating.

The truthful inscription,

FREEMAN HUNT,
BORN
IN QUINCY,
Mar. 21, 1804,
Died in BROOKLYN, N. Y.,
Mar. 2, 1858.

is cut in raised letters in front. The whole presents a very beautiful outline, while the massiveness of its parts gives the idea of strength and durability.

In the peaceful shades of his own beloved town, rests all that is mortal of him, who had hopes of a brighter reality beyond these sublunary scenes.

This monument was executed at the yard of Messrs. McGrath, Mitchell & Co., of this town, and is indeed a work reflecting the highest credit upon their many labors in this increasing branch of their business.

BOLD AND DARING ROBBERY. The jeweller's store of Mr. Holden, of this town, was broken open, during the evening of Friday of last week, and property to the amount of seventy-five to a hundred dollars taken. An entrance was effected through a window, by severing an iron bolt with a saw, or some such instrument, which secured the shutters. It was a daring operation, fearlessly executed, much to the loss, we regret to say, of Mr. Holden. Our burglars seem to possess much artisan skill—it is a pity, therefore, that the police cannot get hold of them, that their ingenuity might be turned to some honorable account, profitable to themselves and to the State.

LOSS OF A VALUABLE HORSE. Mr. Sumner Leavitt, formerly of this town, but now a resident of Dorchester, lost, on Sunday last, a beautiful bay, from a stoppage in the bowels, a disease common among horses. He had left Dorchester in the cool of the morning—had driven moderately, and on his arrival, had the horse put up at Mr. Hardwick's livery stable, where he died in a few hours. His remains on Monday, were removed to Dorchester, and have, ere this, no doubt, been disposed of to the interests of all concerned First—his hide to the tanner; and last his bones to the chemist, for the manufacture of phosphorus, to be converted into Lucifer matches, etc., etc.

WARM WEATHER—ICE CREAMS, ETC.—Summer has commenced in earnest.—The 4th usually brings with it a succession of sunshine and showers, causing the heart of the husbandman to rejoice—pushing vegetation forward towards maturity. The crops look finely, and promise well. But pleasures and even blessings are not without their alloy. We have had some very hot weather, which was painful to bear—especially to those of aldermanic proportions, whose respiration was not unlike that of a steam engine, under a high pressure. What can't be helped, must be borne. Our advice, therefore, is, not to fret, but to take things calmly, and occasionally drop in to the pleasant and fashionable resort of Loud & Veazie, and imbibe one of their delicious Creams. They are cool and refreshing, exhilarating to the system, restoring the mind to quiet and ease, for the enjoyment of a good night's rest.

HAIR DRESSING. Gwin & Reeves, veterans in their professions, and long known to many of our townsmen, are ready at their emporium, in Exchange street, Boston, to cut the hair in truly artistic style, and shave the beard with ease and comfort, and it is a pleasure to submit to their skilful operations. None leave their rooms without a wish to return, and they assuredly do so the first opportunity.

Foreign Correspondence.

GENEVA, JUNE 26th, 1859.

* * * We arrived here safely yesterday, at four o'clock, P. M. * * *

We left Rome in the Diligence, Friday morning, June 10th, and the next day at twelve, reached Sienna, and after waiting four hours took the cars, and at seven arrived at Florence. Here we past nearly three days in visiting picture galleries, churches, &c.

We left the city on Tuesday, June 14th, at four P. M, and arrived at the old town of Lucca about seven. Took a walk on its walls which are nearly three miles in circumference, and covered with fine shade trees. The next morning at five o'clock we were in a carriage en route for the Baths of Lucca—a beautiful ride of fifteen miles. After taking breakfast at the English Hotel, which we found very good and with an excellent landlord, who procured us a guide, we spent several hours very pleasantly at the Baths. The waters are much frequented on account of their medicinal qualities: their temperature is about one hundred and twenty-seven degrees Farenheit; and they are perfectly transparent. The tubs for immersion are of pure white marble.

Returning to Lucca we collected our baggage and left the hotel for the depot. At two o'clock we were in Pisa. We visited the Baptistry, Cathedral and ascended to the top of the leaning tower; rode out to see the farm of the Grand Duke, which contains many thousand acres of land. A beautiful avenue runs through the grounds nearly eight miles long with three rows of trees on each side: we rode into the park about four miles and saw some of his camels, of which he has several hundred.

Tuesday, June 16th. Passed the forenoon in the Campo Santo, Museum of Natural History, and the Botanical Gardens: in the last place saw the Cedar of Lebanon, Camphor, Coffee, Gum Arabic and Castana nut-trees. Left Pisa for Leghorn at twelve and a half o'clock, and arrived soon after one. * *

Friday, 17th. Left Leghorn by steamer for Genoa. We were all somewhat sea-sick on the passage. When we arrived the port was closed and we had to remain on board all night. Early in the morning of the 18th we went on shore and deposited our baggage in the Hotel de France; then hiring a carriage took a fine ride around the environs to see the city. * * * *

In the afternoon took the cars for Allessandria, and thence at seven in the evening took post for Milan. Passing through very extensive fortifications we came out upon a plain where were encamped hundreds of Italian volunteers. This was the first place where the Austrians were attacked by the French, and our road was the one they took on their retreat to Milan. We crossed the Po by a bridge of boats, that was built by the French to transport their army—the Austrians having burnt the old bridge after they had passed over. The trees for a quarter of a mile on each side of the road were cut down to build barriers and embankments to delay the French artillery.

June 19th. We entered Vinjavans, where we stopped to rest the horses. We soon proceeded—the road lay on the level banks of a fine canal—saw many broken bridges and other evidences of the ravages of war—arrived at Milan at ten o'clock. Passing through the streets we saw many wounded soldiers—stopped at the Hotel Great Britian—after dinner went to see the far-famed and magnificent Cathedral.

Having decided to visit the battle field of Magenta, where fourteen thousand Austrian and six thousand of the allied arantes were left dead on the field, we started on the 20th of June for that scene of desolation. It is about fourteen miles from Milan, and we passed many soldiers from France for Brescia, where now is the great army of Napoleon. In three or four days a great battle was expected to take place. (I hear to-day, June 26th, that it has been fought, and that the Austrians have been defeated.) The battle ground lies for four miles along the railroad. I went the whole length of it. The dead bodies have been taken away and buried in large pits. The ground is covered with broken implements of war, strewed about in the greatest confusion. I picked up twelve or fifteen bullets near the depot, where the last stand was made by the Austrians. A house near by was perfectly riddled with cannon balls, and the rooms are covered with dead bodies—nearly two thousand fell within the walls. I suppose you have had full account of it before this time.

Returning to Milan, we started on our journey for Duomo Dossoli, where we arrived on the 22d. Put up at a little inn where we laid down to take some rest.

We then took up our journey over the great Simplon road built by Napoleon. We passed over the top of the pass, which is 6578 feet above the level of the sea—higher than Mt. Washington. Coming down from this great height, we wound our way down the valley of the Rhone to Martigny, where we put up for the night.

On the 23d we commenced our trial of walking to Chamouni, about eight hours distant. With our Alpine sticks in hand, Mr. Jenks, Savary and I, set out on foot; the others of our party were on mules. I walked till within an hour of the place, when my feet began to blister and I mounted a mule; the other two accomplished the whole distance.

Passed nearly the whole of Friday upon the Mer de glace—a sea of ice three hundred and fifty feet thick: (somewhat thicker than that you get from Eaton's pond and not near so grassy) From our windows we had a good view of Mt. Blanc—the first time its summit has been seen clear this season.

Saturday morning we left Chamouni for Geneva. The weather was beautiful, the scenery grand, and we had a delightful ride through the vallies and the mountains. It is a glorious country—

"The land of beauty and of grandeur—
Where looks the cottage out on a domain,
The palace cannot boast of. Seas of lakes,
And hills of forests! Crystal waves that rise,
Midst mountains all of snow and mock the sun,
Returning him his flaming beams more thick,
And radiant than he sent them. Torrents, here
Are b unding floods, and here the tempest roams
At large in all the terrors of its glory."

BOSTON, July 14. 1859.

Large Trade Sales in Boston.—Influx of Strangers.—Statue of Daniel Webster.—Grand State Encampment of Voluntary Militia.—Governor Banks at Fort Independence; pleasing incident.—Presidental Candidates.—Questions at issue.—Foreign news.

The New England Trade Sales are progressing here this week on a large scale. These immense sales at public auction, occur, as you are aware, two or three times in the year, and attract purchasers from various parts of the Union. They consist in Dry Goods, Carpets, Glass, Carriages of all kind, Boots, Shoes, Leather and Findings. It is probable the sales will exceed the present week, a million of dollars—cash or credit. A large number of buyers, including some of the heaviest jobbers from New York and Philadelphia are examining the goods as close as a cat watches a mouse; and marking catalogues. Our first class hotels are full to overflowing, and it is not improbable the public places, either for amusement or curiosity, will be extensively visited, by these merchants from abroad who appear mostly to be strangers to Boston. These great operations in mercantile matters are designed to increase our home trade, and bring customers here at wholesale prices, which, until recently, have confined their visits to New York or Philadelphia.

It is at last settled, that the statue of Daniel Webster shall be placed in the east corner of the State House yard, giving a good view of it from Park street. The subject has given rise to much discussion as to likeness and location; some contending that it bears but little resemblance to this great man, and others, that the State House yard was not a good place for its location.

Governor Banks has issued his order for the State Encampment at Concord, on the 7th, 8th and 9th of September next. What a spectacle! the whole Volunteer Militia of the State, in the field together. From this fact, it is to be designated Camp Massachusetts. Nothing of the kind as military display has ever occurred before in New England. The distance to Concord or "Loring's Crossing" from Boston by the Fitchburg Railroad, is twenty miles, passing through Somerville, West Cambridge, Waltham, Weston, Lincoln to Concord. The Governor by this project, will win new laurels, as he is "every inch a soldier" as well as a statesman. Speaking of his Excellency, a pleasing incident occurred at his visit with adjutant General Stone, on Fort Independence, on Tuesday last, at the invitation of Major Arnold. They with others, were entertained by various experiments in cold and hot-shot firing, and ricochet and direct firing. Governor Banks and General Stone, both tried their skill at target-firing; the Governor bearing off the palm, and coming as near the "Bulls eye" as any of the regular artillerists. Experiments were also made for testing the velocity of cannon balls by means of magnetic wires.

Presidential candidates are multiplying. In Virginia, Hon. R. M. T. Hunter is to be the Democratic candidate, as they say, to run against Governor Banks, whom the South predicts will be the Republican candidate. The friends of Governor Wise are no where. The West seems divided on Messrs. Guthrie, Douglas, and Breckenridge; Kentucky is firm for the Vice President. Judge Douglas is in New York, where he is to remain a few weeks, and gossip says, his friends are quietly arranging a programme for the Charleston Convention, but look upon his nomination there as a foregone conclusion. Nominate any other man at Charleston but Mr. Douglas, and he is beaten. As it is too evident that the Democratic party opposed to the "Little Giant" will make the revival of the odious slave-trade, and the intervention by Congress for the protection of slavery in the Territories, issues in the coming National election. Not a Free State in the Union would ratify such principles. The new doctrine of the South, that it would be a usurpation of power for Territories to legislate on the subject of slavery, and that Congress might abrogate such claims, will not take with the Free States any how.

The leading news of the week from abroad, may be compressed into a few words. Advices from California, to June 19th, represent a much depressed market and very low prices. Business no doubt is is dull there, as a hammar. The Star of the West brings to New York, nearly a million and three quarters in treasury.

The European war is becoming sanguinary and calamitous. Another great battle has been fought at Salferino, at which the Allies, though claiming the victory, are supposed to have lost eighteen thousand men. Some of the French infantry regiments were nearly cut to pieces. The Austrians admit a loss of twenty thousand men in this battle. It is said Napoleon had an epaulette shot away. At last accounts he was in excellent health at the head of his army. x.

For the Patriot.

More Truth.

MR. EDITOR: In your paper of last week, "Bootmaker" says, that I do not tell the whole truth concerning the Bootmaker's Strike. Now I distinctly say, that there was no grievances to redress, except such as was created by the Society itself. The primary cause of the Strike, was the refusal of the Society to receive as a member, a man, whom some of the members held a private pique against. The man continued to receive his work from the shop of A. C. & Co. Several meetings were held, the man did not present himself for admission, for two or three monthly meetings, as it was inconvenient, he living in Bridwewater; but he told the Standing Committee, that he would attend the July meeting, and satisfy the Society in regard to any fine they chose to impose on him: a special meeting was called immediately, and as a complaint had been made against the Americans working on the shops who would not join the Society on the first invitation, the shop of A. C. & Co. was put on strike, the men working for the three other shops voting unanimously for it.

That the Society is unreasonable in their demands, there can be no doubt; for by a vote of the Society, the Americans working on the shops when the Society was first established, were excepted; if they came forward and joined the Society, they were welcome, and if they staid away, no fault would be found. On the shop of E. M. & Co., there was but one American working, who did not belong to the Society, and he had been excepted by them; yet to show their power, this shop was put on strike! What honesty, what consistency! The firm of B C & Co., had some ten or twelve Americans on their shop, who were not members of the Society, they having been excepted by the Society, yet this shop was put on strike; and moreover, the firms of E. M. and B. C, never agreed not to hire a man who refused to join the Society; this "Bootmaker" knows to be a fact. How can "Bootmaker" expect men to be united, where force governs instead of reason; where a majority are opposed to the Society, if they only had the independence to speak for themselves; a Society where men's "Nationality" has been held up to ridicule and contempt.

In regard to "Bootmaker's enquiry, as to whether it was "from principle or for a consideration," that governed some of those who went first in on the strike, I shall speak for myself. When I first joined the Society, I understood that Americans were not wanted there; for one, I did not wish to have the thing made up exclusively of foreigners, I therefore proposed to have the Americans invited to join; and on the first invitation, three came forward and joined the Society, and others promised to; and only one positively refused. At an adjourned meeting, it was understood that the whole subject would be laid over till the next monthly meeting; but before the time came round, a special meeting was called, and a strike voted for. "W" seeing there was no chance for fair play, withdrew from the Society and took out his work, to show to the Society that he set them at defiance, and that he was opposed to coercing men into measures, or to join a Society which they detested; and likewise, that he was opposed to the principle of "Rule or ruin." These were the con-si-de-ra-tions by which I was governed—and none other.

CHAPMAN'S DAGUERREOTYPE SALOON:—We are pleased to hear such pleasing intelligence from our friend at the other end of the street. His rooms, we learn, have been crowded, since the 4th, with anxious visitors, desirous of obtaining a lasting memorial, either of themselves or some valued friend. They certainly are beautiful, always true to the original.

N. B. The friends of "Popular Sovereignty" are requested to avail themselves of this opportunity, by calling immediately, and have their likenesses taken.

☞ We have come to the conclusion, that high prices among dentists do not guarantee good work. Some of our friends are very sanguine in the opinion that the best workmanship and the most reasonable prices are found at the Dental Rooms of Dr. Stocking, No. 19, Tremont Row, Boston.

ICE CREAM. We learn that Loring A. French, at his saloon, corner of Coddington street and Washington square, serves his patrons with Copeland's unrivalled Ice Creams of different flavors, and their delicacy and richness secures for him a host of customers.

☞ In every house should be kept on hand for emergencies a box of "My Mother's Salve." Prudence dictates this investment. See advertisement.

Poetry.

The Night Before the Mowing.

All shimmering with the morning shine,
And diamonded with dew,
And quivering with the scented wind
That thrills its green heart through—
The little field, the smiling field,
With all its flowers a blowing,—
How happy looks the golden field
The day before the mowing!

And still 'neath the departing light,
Twilight—though void of stars,
Save where, low westering, Venus sinks,
From the red eye of Mars;
How peaceful sleep the silent field,
With all its beauties glowing,
Half stirring—like a child in dreams—
The night before the mowing!

Sharp steel! inevitable hand!
Cut keen—cut kind! Our field
We know full well must be laid low
Before a fragrance yields.
Plenty, and mirth, and honest gain,
Its blameless death bestowing—
And yet we weep, and yet we weep,
The night before the mowing!

The Two Parts.

Aye, they in plodding on so steadily
Did gain a heap of gold;
While I, who hurried on so merrily,
Gained brighter wealth ten-fold.

A wealth of thought and cheerfulness,
The comage of the soul,
And, more than all, a hope to bless,
With promise filled my bowl.

They ride in princely chariots proud,
By blooded coursers drawn,—
They feast in stately halls the crowd
Of friends in lace and lawn:

My carriage is the wide-winged thought,
By fancy wheeled above,—
My home the world-wide space unbought,
My feast the feast of love.

They labored on till life was waning,
To live above all strife,—
I lived the whole, the present gaining,
And with me cherished life.

Life is Fading.

Time is drawing nearer, nearer,
While our heads are turning gray;
Tears are falling on life's mirror
Every day!

Time is closing Beauty's portals,
Flowers are blooming to decay;
Fate is delving graves for mortals
Every day!

While our pleasure-boat is rolling
Over life's eventful spray,
Funeral bells are tolling, tolling
Every day!

While the laurel wreath is shading
O'er the frame-lit brow of clay,
Sad we see the garlands fading
Every day!

Love, then take your promised treasures,
Fame is dazzling to betray;
Life is fading with its pleasures,
Every day!

Hence, while all things are declaring
Death a seeker for his prey,
Let us be ourselves preparing
Every day!

Stanzas.

Leaf by leaf the roses fall,
Drop by drop the spring runs dry;
One by one, beyond recall,
Summer beauties fade and die;
But the roses bloom again,
And the spring will gush anew
In the pleasant April rain
And the Summer's sun and dew.

So in hours of deepest gloom,
When the springs of gladness fail,
And the roses in their bloom
Droop like maidens wan and pale;
We shall find some hope that lies
Like a silent germ apart,
Hidden far from careless eyes
In the garden of the heart.

Some sweet hope to gladness wed,
That will spring afresh and new
When grief 's winter shall have fled,
Giving place to sun and dew—
Some sweet hope that breathes of Spring,
Through the weary, weary time,
Budding for its blossoming,
In the spirit's glorious clime.

Anecdotes.

Deacon, said a young man, do you use tobacco.

Yes, was the reply; I have used it twenty years, and I shall use it twenty more if I live.

I am surprised, said the youth, I thought you a gentleman and a Christian; and left him.

Come back, said the deacon. Young man, I 'pray you understand; I use tobacco to kill tic on sheep and lice on calves."

I say, Mr. Pilot, ain't you going to start soon? said a cockney on a steamer lying-to during a fog.

As soon as the fog clears up, replied the captain.

Well, it is starlight now overhead said the cockney.

O, yes! but we're not going that way, said the captain.

Said a man to a little boy, strutting with his cigar, before breakfast. My boy, you would look better with bread and butter in your mouth, than with a cigar.

I know it, said the urchin, but it would not be half so glorious.

Johnny, how many seasons are there?

Six; spring, summer, autumn, winter, opera seasons, and Thompson's Seasons.

Weigh your words, said a man to a fellow who was blustering away in a towering passion at another.

They won't weigh much if he did, said the antagonist coolly.

Miscellaneous.

Aunt Mercy.

She was my great, great aunt, and her head was covered with the snows of ninety winters. Her face and hands were wrinkled and withered; her form was bent, and she moved about the house slow and painfully, with the aid of a staff. They told me that she had been called very pretty in her youth, and sometimes I used to search the thin, blighted face, for some traces of all that was once a "gladness to gaze upon," but I never found them, except when her thoughts wandered off into the memories of her youth, and the heart of the old woman would warm, as the long gone days rose up, and uncovered their faces before, and a new light would brighten [illegible] eyes, and they would glow strangely with smiles, in that aged face, and then I could fancy what Aunt Mercy must have been in her youth.

Well, November's raly set in agin. I thought I felt a touch of rheumatiz in my shoulder this mornin', when I got up, said the old woman, one morning, and she came, with a little shiver, toward the fire, for she had been peering through her spectacles, at the sallow clouds which had arisen during the night, and seemed to blur out suddenly all the glory and beauty of November.

Why, Aunt Mercy, what in the world will you do before the winter is out, if this little chill in the air overcomes you so? I asked, looking up from the papers of flower seeds that I was labelling for the next spring.

It's more than I can tell, child, she said, mournfully. May be, afore the winter's out, I shall be where no chills can harm me.

Then she sat down in the small rocking-chair, that always stood in the right side of the fire-place, and leaned her face on her hand.

Aunty, what are you thinking about? I asked at last, for the old woman's silence troubled me.

I was thinkin' of the time when the news came that Increase was dead. It was such a kind of day as this and the wind complained round the corner of the house, just as it does now. I never hear it, but I think of that time.

I knew that Increase Pike was my aunt's only brother, and that he lost his life in the old revolutionary war, but this was the extent of my information respecting him.

Do tell me about that time, Aunt Mercy, I said feeling that a sad story would best harmonize with the wind, and the face of the sky, and I went and sat down on a low stool, opposite to the old woman, with the seeds in my apron.

Increase was just nineteen that spring, when the order came out to Pine side, for more recruits, and he was full o' ardor and spirit in his country's cause, and was amongst the first to enlist.

Dear me! how taken aback mother was that night that he came home, and told he'd given in his name; but he laughed at all fears, and told her she'd be proud enough of her son, when he'd got to be Colonel, or Cap'n Pike, and talked about whippin' them British scoundrels, and strutted about the kitchen in such a brave way, and looked so strong and handsome, with the bright brown curls shakin' round his face, that somehow we looked at him and couldn't believe any harm could come to him, and he had such a bold, certain way o' talkin', we began to take for granted all that he said.

Well, the rest of the time, until he went, was all taken up in gettin' things ready for him; as we wanted him to go off as scrumptious as possible. Jest at that time Deacon Morgan's oldest daughter, Thankful, was married to Josiah Plain. They lived on the old turnpike road, about half a mile from our house. Now, Thankful and I had al'ays been as thick as two peas in a pod, and of course I had an invitation to the weddin', and mother promised me a new chintz gown for the occasion, and this was a great event to me, as money was scarce in them war times, and our last harvest hadn't turned out remarkable.

But, as the time drew near for Increase to leave. I began to turn over in my mind what sort of present I could make him, to carry off, and keep round him, so that he would al'ays be sort o' reminded of his sister Mercy, and at last I hit on one, a little red morocco-covered Bible. But I knew, in order to get this, I'd have to go without the chintz dress for the weddin', and for a day or two there went on a sharp struggle in my mind, for I was only seventeen then, and had a great fancy for shinin' feathers, as all young things have.

One mornin', however, I sat stitchin' on a flannel sleeve for Increase, and mother was heelin' a stockin', and sighin' every few minutes, to herself, when I spoke up sudden.—Mother, I've jest concluded to have your old black silk weddin' dress turned, so I can wear it to the weddin', and take the money you promised me for a chintz gown, and buy Increase a little red pocket Bible, that he can al'ays carry about him. Jared Munson can get it when he goes to town to-morrow, if you've no objections.

No, Massy, my dear child. I ain't got no objections,' says she, and she leaned right over and kissed me, which was a very uncommon thing for mother.

The day before Increase left, he and I went to take a little walk through Crooked Lane; I remember the afternoon better than I do yesterday's, though its more'n seventy years ago. In was in the late May, and the trees were all in blossom, like tents o' pink and white, pitched thick as an army's. The air was full of sweet smells, and the songs of the robins, and the pastures were sprin- [illegible] with stars on a summer night as the sky [illegible] heart was so full, I didn't much enjoy the afternoon; and Increase, he joked and talked after his lightest fashin', as we went along, but I felt there was something underneath all this.

At last I spoke, takin' the little Bible out of my pocket. It's all I've got to give you, Increase; but you'll take it kindly, and remember it's from your little sister Massy, and read a verse in it every day for her sake!

He took it with a grave face. Yes; I'll promise you, dear little sister. I'll wear it close to my heart.

O—h, Increase; and here I broke right down. I put my arms round his neck, and cried.

COme, now, Pussy, don't give up so. I'm only goin' off to give them red coats the whackin they deserve, and comin' home, one o' these days, to make you and mother stare at my officer's uniform, and all the gals in the singing school will envy you such a brother, see if they don't.

Oh—but Increase, what if anything should happen to you—what if you should be brought home with a broken leg, or taken prisoner, or—— or——

Come, come, now, Massy; you'll never do for a soldier's wife, if you go on at that rate. That wasn't the way the Spartin mothers used to send off their boys to the war. Why don't you say, If you don't give them British a good lickin', I won't kiss you when you come back.

He said this with such a look, that I burst right out into a laugh that shook the tears off my cheeks, and by this time we had got home, and the cow stood waitin' at the gate, and that was the last walk Increase and I ever took together; but we shall have one in another lane, where the autumn winds never blow, as they blew that day, when the news came.

Tell me, Aunty.

It was a cloudy, blustering day. We heard the week before, there had been a skirmish with the British, but no news came of Increase, and mother'd began to grow un easy. I was paring apples in the milk room, when there came a loud knock at the kitchen door. My heart leaped right into my throat then, for I felt, somehow, there were tidings of Increase.

Mother stepped to the door, and then I heard Jared Munson's voice; he married my father's second cousin's darter.

Miss Pike, said he, comin' right in, we've bad news from the war, and —— and —— I'm sorry for you!

Oh, Jared, has anything happened to my boy? asked mother, in a tone I never shall forget, though I live to be as old as Methuselah.

The great, streng man burst right out a cryin' like a child. Miss Pike, he said, it's happened to us, not to him, for God's taken him to himself.

Here Aunt Mercy broke right down, and tears flowed over her withered cheeks, as the rains of November rush over the withered earth. For a long time she did not speak. At last, in a broken, weary voice, she said—

It was a dreadful blow to mother, dreadful. She tried to hold up her head after it, for she was a Christian; but it fairly broke her heart—still that was such a comfort—such a comfort!

What was thus a comfort, Aunty?

Why, you see, a month later, there come home all Increase's things, and the little Bible among 'em. He lived some two hours after he fell, and had borrowed a pencil of one of the men, and wrote on the cover of the little Bible, with his dyin' hand—

Massy, little sister, I have read your Bible as I promised, every day, and it has made me wise unto salvation. Good bye to mother, and tell her, her boy was not afraid to die.

The tears were dropping fast upon my hands; but Aunt Mercy's had ceased to flow, and a light, which seemed to me fairer than the lost light of her youth, illumined her aged face, as she said gazing upward, I have waited more than seventy years, and I too, shall not be afraid, Increase, my brother.

Genius and Labor.

Alexander Hamilton once said to an intimate friend: "Men give me some credit for genius. All the genius that I have lies just in this: When I have a subject in hand, I study it profoundly. Day and night it is before me. I explore it in all its bearings. My mind becomes pervaded with it. Then the effort which I make is what the people are pleased to call the fruits of genius. It is the fruit of labor and thought."

Mr. Webster once replied to a gentleman who pressed him to speak on a subject of great importance: "The subject interests me deeply, but I have not time. There, sir," pointing to a huge pile of letters on the table, "is a pile of unanswered letters, to which I must reply before the close of the session, (which was then three days off.) I [illegible] think myself [illegible] justice."

"But, Mr. Webster, a few words from you would do so much to awaken public attention to it."

If there be so much weight in my words as you represent, it is because I do not allow myself to speak on any subject till I have imbued my mind with it.

Demosthenes was once urged to speak on a great and sudden emergency. "I am not prepared," said he, and obstinately refused.

The law of labor is equally binding on genius and mediocrity.

Habits of the Shad.

The habits of our fish have been but very little attended to in this country. Our scientific men, it is true, have been very precise in their accurate classification and in the use of their ponderous nomenclature—they have described our fishes even to the shape of a scale, or the number of thorns in the dorsal fin, but they have not condescended to note their habits, their food, their length of life, with all such particulars as would interest common readers, and be of use to mankind.

No fish is more valued or more valuable than the shad; yet but few of its habits of life are known. The books are silent, and angling gives no information. It was, for a long time, a commonly received opinion that the shad spent the winter in some part of the Gulf of Mexico, and then as spring advanced and the snow ceased running, came along the coast and entered the rivers in succession. If this were true, there would be no uniformity, year after year, in the run of shad in each river. The very distant varieties would all become intermingled. But each river has its own variety. Those of Connecticut river have long been known as possessing superior flavor to any others. The variety that seeks the Hudson as a spawning ground is easily distinguished from ours.—This fact of the distinctness of the varieties in each river tends to the belief that shad go no further than the mouth of the streams in which they are hatched.

The habits of the shad are unlike those of other fish. As soon as the snow-water has ceased running, they press up the river as far as they can reach, in order to deposit their spawn. In following this instinct they never stop for refreshment or food. Who ever found anything in the maw or stomach of a shad, that would indicate the nature of its food? Who ever knew them to bite at a baited hook? They do not feed from the time they enter the stream until they sink down thin and exhausted into the deep places at the mouth. For this purpose of nature the shad has been preparing itself during the quiet luxuries of a winter, and has become fattened for the use of man, or, if it escapes his net, for the reproduction of its species.

The shad lives but a single year. It is hatched in the early summer—descends the streams as soon as large enough—feeds and fatten in the winter at the mouth of the stream—ascends in the spring to deposit its spawn—descends to die at the bottom of the ocean. This fact accounts for the uniformity in the size of the fish. A Connecticut river shad seldom goes beyond seven pounds, and the variation in size is comparitively slight. The bass, on the other hand, which is known to live many years, varies from half a pound weight to fifty, even in our own river. Has a longer time to grow, and shows a much greater diversity in size.—These cisiderations have lately led to the conclusio that one year only was the duration of a shad's life. What was only a matter of cojecture and inference, has been lately proed by the artificial fish-breeders. Somewhere in the State of New York, one of the raisers of fish from spawn has raised large numers of shad, which he fed in early life with crumbled crackers strewn upon the pond where they were kept, and has proved their shad hold on existence. He raised them for the purpose of supplying the very large fish he had in his tanks and ponds with food. As this science of breeding fish is known now, the habits of the different species will be more easily described.—Hartford Courant.

The Great Orators.

"What a man," says Walpole, "Fox is!" After his long and exhausting speech on Hastings' trial, he was handing ladies into their coaches with all the gaiety and prattle of an idle gallant.

Burke's melodramatic trick was a complete failure, when he flung the dagger on the floor of the House of Commons, and produced nothing but a smothered laugh, and a joke from Sheridan:—"The gentleman has brought us the knife, but where is the fork?"

When Lord Erskine made his debut at the bar, his agitation almost overcame him, and he was just going to sit down. "At that moment," said he, "I thought I felt my little children tugging at my gown, and the idea [illegible] to an exertion of which I did not [illegible] tached to a rumored appointment to a new judgeship, said it was all moonshine. Lyndhurst, in his dry and waggish way, remarked—"May be so, my Lord Harry; but I have a strong notion, moonshine though it be, you would like to see the first quarter of it."

Pitt and Fox were listened to with profound respect and in silence, broken only by occasional cheers; but from the moment of Sheridan's rising, there was an expectation of pleasure which, to his last days, was seldom disappointed. A low murmur of eagerness ran around the house; every word was watched for, and his pleasantry set the whole assemblage in a roar.

Canning said of Grattan's eloquence, that for the last two years, his public exhibitions were a complete failure, and that you saw all the mechanism of his oratory without its life. It was like lifting the flap of a barrel-organ and seeing the wheels. You saw the skeleton of his sentences without the flesh on them, and were induced to think that what you had considered flashes were merely priming kept ready for the occasion.

Mr. Burke, on one occasion, had just risen in the House of Commons, with some papers in his hand, on the subject of which he intended to make a motion, when a rough hewn member, who had no ear for the charms of eloquence, rudely started up and said—"Mr. Speaker, I hope the honorable gentleman does not mean to read that large bundle of papers, and to bore us with a long speech into the bargain." Mr. B. was so swollen with rage as to be incapable of utterance, and absolutely ran out of the house. On this occasion, George Selwyn remarked that it was the only time he ever saw the fable realized—a lion put to flight by the braying of an ass.

Hints on Travelling.

At this season many persons contemplate travelling; to do so with the largest amount of comfort and advantage, physical, social, and mental, the following suggestions are made:

Take one-fourth more money than your actual expenses.

Acquaint yourself with the geography of the route and region of travel.

Have a good supply of small change, and have no bill or piece higher than ten dollars, that you may not take counterfeit change.

So arrange as to have but a single article of luggage to look after.

Dress substantially; better to be too warm for two or three hours at noon, than to be too cold for the remainder of the twenty-four.

Arrange, under all circumstances, to be at the place of starting fifteen or twenty minutes before the time, thus allowing for unavoidable or unanticipated detention on the way.

Do not commence a day's travel before breakfast, even if that has to be eaten at daylight. Dinner or supper, or both, can be more healthfully dispensed with, than a good warm breakfast.

Put your purse and watch in your vest pocket, and all under your pillow, and you will not be likely to leave either.

The best and most secure fastening of your chamber door is a common bolt on the inside, if there is none, lock the door, turn the key so that it can be drawn partly out, and put the wash basin under it; thus, any attempt to use a jimmy or put in another key, will push it out, and cause a racket among the crockery, which will be pretty certain to rouse the sleeper and rout the robber.

A sixpenny sandwich eaten leisurely in the cars, is better for you than a dollar dinner, bolted at a "station."

Take with you a month's supply of patience, and always think thirteen times before you reply once to any supposed rudeness or insult, or inattention.

Do not suppose yourself specially and designedly neglected if waiters at hotels do not bring what you call for in double quick time, nothing so distinctly marks the well bred man as a quiet waiting on such occasions; passion proves the puppy.

Do not allow yourself to converse in a tone loud enough to be heard by a person two or three seats from you; it is the mark of a boor, if in a man, and of want of refinement and lady-like delicacy, if in a woman.

Comply cheerfully and gracefully with the customs of the conveyances in which you travel, and of the places where you stop.

Respect yourself by exhibiting the manners of a gentleman and a lady, if you wish to be treated as such, and you receive the respect of others.

Travel is a great leveller, take the position which others assign you from your conduct rather than from your pretensions.

The Zouaves and Turcos.

One of the circumstances to which the Zouave is indebted for his remarkable flightnastics imposed upon him are sometimes formidable. He is made to run by the hour at the top of his speed; he jumps, climbs, runs on his hands and feet, and is taught to do all this, day after day, with musket and fixed bayonet in the hand. He is taught also to fence with his bayonet, and while he is thus fencing he actually leaps upon his enemy and stamps him to the ground. They do not care much about firing, preferring the bayonet and their rapid charges. A story is told in the papers which illustrates this fact: Just before one of the last combats they were distributing the cartridges to the different companies. When it came to the turn of the Zouaves, they showed all the pudery of a young girl to whom one offers a present.—They shrugged their shoulders, sidled away, said they didn't care about them, and they had to force them to accept. Then they took a cartouche delicately between the end of their fingers, and said carelessly: Pardon, Sergeant, I'll only take one!" What need, in effect, have they of cartouches? They go almost as rapidly as their balls, and they have their bayonets beside.

The Turcos have excited as much curiosity as the Zouaves. Their commander says that with the bayonet or in face of a battery of artillery, they are splendid soldiers; their only fear is of mounted men; they do not stand well when threatened with cavalry.—It is the habit of these savages in their native country to cut off the heads of their prisoners and the wounded on the field of battle. They have been taught by their French commanders that this will not be permitted under the French flag. At Magenta they were among the first in action, and their mode of attack is represented as something peculiarly wild and savage. They attacked with loud cries, uttering all the oaths in the Mohammedan language. When they took prisoners they danced and yelled around them, putting them down on the ground—blasphemed outrageously over their heads, pronouncing in Arab all sort of curses against their army and country—all of which must have astonished not a little the stoical Germans. The French commanders seem to be well satisfied, however, with the first trial of their half-tamed Kabiles. Their costume is the same as that of the Zouaves, only it is entirely green, and very picturesque. Like the Zouaves, they wear beards with shaved foreheads.

When the people in certain districts saw the regiment of Turcos arrive, they barricaded themselves in their houses, uttering fearful cries. They avowed subsequently, when interrogated on the subject, that the Austrians had told them that there were soldiers in the French army, (referring to the Turcos) who lived only upon the meat of Christians! Dei soldai che mangiano des Christiani, they said. While one may find it astonishing that the Austrians should resort to such means of intimidation, it is not at all astonishing that the Turcos should have been recognized at first sight by these alarmed people, as the promised cannibals.

Fish Nests.

It was not until lately that any of the fish built nests. But the Frenchmen are always prying into such matters, and one of them lately discovered a fish called the Shotselback at work. He brings all the materials in his mouth, of course, in very small quantities at a time, and frequently from very considerable distances. It is very instructive to observe his contrivances for preventing the foundation of his structure from being carried away by the stream, which he effects by bringing sand, also in his mouth, and placing it upon the successive layers forming the foundation of his edifice. His next process is to cement these layers well together, by a glutten which he obtains from his own skin, by rubbing himself against them; and thus is formed the floor upon which the rest of the structure is to be raised. It is occasionally further secured at its anchorage by a root or twig at the bottom of the stream, or by some other accidental assistance. His next process is to stick small, or occasionally stronger materials as uprights all round the foundation; frequently taking them out with his mouth, and putting them in situations more to his fancy, till he is at length satisfied that they are all in the right places. Sometimes he finds a portion of his materials altogether unsuitable, in which case he takes it away to a distance from the intended nursery of his off-spring, and regardles of labor and fatigue, gets another lot of materials. He cements the walls as they arise, by rubbing against them as he had done to the floor, and then sets about the roof, which he completes in a similar manner. His hardest work appears to be this cementing process; the vibrating of the body, by means of which he exudes the necessary mucus from the surface of the skin, seeming to exhaust him very much. He makes two openings to his continually through them in a such a manner as to keep them neat and open.

Curious Facts in Natural History.

The rattlesnake finds a superior foe in the deer and the black snake. Whenever a buck discovers a rattlesnake in a situation which invites attack, he loses no time in preparing for battle. He makes up to within ten or twelve feet of the snake; then leaps forward and aims to sever the body of the snake with his bifurcated hoofs. The first onset is most commonly successful, but if otherwise, the buck repeats the trial until he cuts the snake in twain. The rapidity and fatality of his skilful manœuvre leave but a slight chance for its victim either to escape or to inject his poison into his more alert antagonist. The black snake is also more than equal competitor against the rattlesnake. Such is its celerity of motion, not only in running, but in entwining himself round its victim, that the rattlesnake has no way of escaping from its fatal embrace. When the black and rattlesnake are about to meet for battle, the former darts forward at the height of his speed, and strikes at the neck of the latter with unerring certainty, leaving a foot or two of the upper part of his own body at liberty. In an instant he encircles him within five or six folds; he then stops and looks the strangled and gasping foe in the face, to ascertain the effect produced upon his corseted body. If he shows signs of life, the coils are multiplied and the screws are tightened; the operator all the while narrowly watching the countenance of the helpless victim. Thus the two remain thirty or forty minutes; the executioner then slackens one coil, noticing at the same time whether any signs of life appear; if so, the coil is resumed and retained until the incarcerated wretch is completely dead. The moccasin snake is destroyed in the same way.

Fun not confined to Man.

Small birds chase each other about in play, but perhaps the conduct of the crane and trumpeter is the most extraordinary. The latter stands on one leg, hops about in the most eccentric manner, and throws somersets. The Americans call it the mad bird, on account of these singularities. Water birds, such as ducks and geese, dive after each other and clear the surface of the water with outstretched neck and flapping wings, throwing abundant spray around. Deer often engage in sham battle or trial of strength, by twisting their horns together and pushing for the mastery.

All animals pretending violence in their play stop short of exercising it; the dog takes the greatest precaution not to injure by his bite; and the ourang outang, in wrestling with his keeper, pretends to throw him, and makes feints of biting him. Some animals carry out in their play the semblance of catching their prey; young cats, for instance, leap after every small and moving object, even to the leaves strewed by the autumn wind; they crouch and steal forward ready for the spring, the body quivering, and the tail vibrating with emotion, they bound on the moving leaf, and again spring forward to another. Birds of the magpie kind, are the analogues of monkeys—full of mischief, play and mimickry. There is a story of a tame magpie, that was seen busily employed in a garden gathering pebbles, and with much solemnity and a studied air buried them in a hole made to receive a post. After dropping each stone, it cried "curruck!" triumphantly and set off for another. On examining the spot, a poor toad was found in this hole, which the magpie was stoning for his amusement.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

THE LAST WONDER OF THE 19TH CENTURY—Geo. Robert's "Illuminated Quadruple Constellation," is certainly one of the greatest typographical achievements of the age. It is printed on an immense sheet of eight mammoth pages, containing thirteen columns to a page, and each column, according to exact measurement, is four feet in length. It seems almost incredible, but such is the fact. Its embellishments, which are numerous, covering nearly one half of the paper, are many of them fine, and its general appearance excellent. We are told, that within its ample folds, more matter is contained than in six different numbers of Harper's monthly, or thirteen of the New York Ledger. The celebrated "Moon Hoax," which created such a sensation a few years since, is, with other works, published entire. For a campaign paper, if there could be found room on the political field to throw its colossal folds to the breeze, it would prove invaluable, as a platform would be furnished broad enough for any party. Price, fifty cents single copies, or three for one dollar; to be had of news agents generally.

...ply of this excellent coal, from the inexhaustible mines of Pennsylvania, which he is now prepared to deliver in large or small quantities, at the lowest market prices. It is an indispensable article for the parlor or workshop. It burns very freely, with a bright brilliant glow, and contains less, than most other coals used, of those impurities, which turns to waste. Now is the time, while prices are low, and the weather is favorable, to lay in a supply for the approaching season. All orders thankfully received and promptly met, by Mr. B., at his counting room, on Brackett's wharf.

CELEBRATION AT PLYMOUTH. The Corner Stone of the National Monument to the Forefathers, now erecting at Plymouth, by the Pilgrim Society, will be laid on Tuesday, August second, amid great demonstrations.

PACKARD'S MOUNTAIN DEW. This is an excellent article for the dressing of the hair. We think we can safely say that it is unsurpassed by any now in use. It gives the hair a beautiful gloss, and has the other necessary qualities for an article of this kind. See advertisement in another column.

JEWISH CEMETERY. The Jewish Society which worship in Boston, have selected a most eligible site for a Cemetery, in the pleasant village of South Reading—ten miles from the city, and are already preparing the ground, in a tasteful but simple manner, as the last resting place of those who die in the faith of the Israelitish Church. A more lovely spot for such a purpose could not have been chosen. It lies in a quiet and retired part of the town, amid Nature's richest scenery, surrounded by highly cultivated fields,—its southern boundary being washed by the waters of the beautiful lake Quinapoxan.

HOME-MADE BEER — PASTRY — CREAM CAKES, ETC. Our citizens perhaps, are not aware, that they can be furnished at their own doors, with any of the above named articles, fresh from the mint of the manufacturer; but such is the fact. Mrs. Henry M. Wood, on Cottage Avenue, has cheerfully undertaken this duty, and is now prepared to furnish a healthy and most savory beverage, refreshing as a summer drink, compounded from roots and other simples, which upon trial will be found far superior to the miserable slops and washings, usually brought here from the city. Her pastry too, is excellent, and deserving of notice; particularly her cream cakes—the flavor and delicacy of which we have been permitted to test. They are a fit accompaniment for the tea-table, to be enjoyed along with our muffins and crumpets.

For the Patriot,

Bootmaker's Strike.

MR. EDITOR: Though it is extremely disagreeable to engage in a controversy with a person in "W's." situation, I consider it necessary to correct his last communication.

I know it is natural for a person who voluntarily places himself in the awkward position which 'W.' is now in, to attempt to find an excuse for his conduct; but 'W' should know that for a man who deserts his colors on the field, there is only one honorable way to retrieve his character; but nobody expects 'W' to pursue this course.

'W.' says the Society had no grievances to redress, except some of their own creation. This is error No. 1—but perhaps I do not know what 'W.' considers a grievance. Before the organization of the Society, the Bootmakers struck for higher wages. They gained that strike. To keep wages at a fair rate, and to prevent men from being compelled to labor for one-third less than they now receive, they organized a Society, and drew up a Bill of Wages, which was presented to the Bosses, and agreed to by them all. One principle of the Society is, that the men would not work for any shop that employed men not belonging to the Society. The Society thought a breach of this agreement a grievance. 'W.' does not. It is false, that a man was refused admittance into the Society because of private pique; nor was that the cause of the strike. 'W.' says that E. M. & Co. and B. C. & Co. never agreed not to hire a man who refused to join the Society. He must feel his position very keenly, or he must think that others can neither hear, nor read, when he makes such an unblushing assertion as this. The Bosses whose cause he undertakes to defend, may well exclaim, "save us from our friends." After the organization of the Society, several men who worked for A. C. & Co., refused point blank to join the Society. At the meeting last August, the subject was brought before the Society, and a Committee waited on all the Bosses, to know if they would agree to send men to the Society. A. C. & Co. and N. H. W, agreed to do so; B. C. & Co. and E. M. & Co., did not agree. In consequence, A. C. & Co. discharged the men who would not join. Some of these men went to work for B. C. & Co., and on that account their shop was struck. The strike lasted two days, when B. C. & Co agreed to the wishes of the men, and they went to work again. In Septe[illegible] and after some little delay the matter was settled by Mr. M. agreeing to the Society's rule. In the face of these facts, (which 'W' knows in common with every member of the Society,) he makes this statement. The condition of this agreement was, that the Society should pay for stock made away with by any of its members. In only one instance did this occur. A man who worked for A. C. & Co., took a dozen pairs of stock from the shop, and did not return them. A. C. & Co. sent a bill to the Society for the amount—thirty dollars—which was paid. The man from Bridgewater, of whom 'W' speaks so feelingly, was only the occasion of the strike; the causes were of older date. A man resides in Roxbury who has been at work for the shop all along. The men suspected this often; two or three Committees, went to the shop about him. The Boss denied that he was at work, and the men believed him. He was found in the shop again, and the men complained; the Boss again said he would get no more work from the shop, and the men were satisfied; but he is at work for the shop still. The requiring of Americans to join the Society, is another cause of 'W's.' desertion. This question was before the Society a year ago, and laid aside. several members thought it wrong, but when 'W.' joined the Society, he immediately insisted upon it as a principle, and kept it constantly before the Society as such. He even went so far as to agitate the calling of a special meeting, to bring this question before the Society. The writer of this article, has always opposed any action on this question; and has been repeatedly taunted with cowardice, in not taking action upon it by the very men who now desert, and make this the excuse of their desertion. It was only when the question was pressed upon them in an official form, when they were compelled to vote upon it, that the Society took action. If they voted for it, they knew to what it would lead; if they voted against it, it would be to acknowledge the principle was wrong. They chose the right, and accepted the Report of the Committee. So little was 'W.' dissatisfied at the vote, that he assisted to give the Committee the names and residences, of many men whom the Committee did not know, and could not otherwise find out; and when the Committee reported, 'W.' complained that they did not wait on all the men, and he made a motion, that they should wait upon several others, whose names and residences, he furnished in full meeting.—'W.' knows full well that any person who refusee to join, after notice, is considered refractory. He voted to give the notice, after being cautioned to what it would lead, and he now turns round and eats his words and his votes. On the vote for the strike, of those who deserted with 'W.' fifteen voted for the strike; thirteen voted agnst it; ten of those who voted against the strike, did not go in. The insinuation that A.C. & Co's. shop was put on strike by ment work on other shops is foolish; nine-tenths o the votes in the affirmative being cast by men on that shop; more than three times the entire number in the negative.; but our readers may infer the motive. Those who rgued loudest, and most disorderly, to put P.C. and E. M's. shops on strike, are all no in at work on A. C's. shop. Your reader may infer their motives, also.

'W.' did not vote against the principle of the strike; he took occasion to explain his vote, and stated that it was the wording of the motion he voted against, and not the principle. The only man who mentioned "Nationality" in my hearing in the Society, was hissed down; he is now commanding a section of the "Brigade."

I suppose we must believe 'W.' when he says that he was governed by good motives, in taking out his work. It is true that a good many persons may be uncharitable to think otherwise; but there will always be such people in the world. He at least ought to be an advocate for the Societ; when he came last to town, he could get one-third more for the kind of work he waddoing, than when he left town.

A man's nationality should never be made a test in the Trade-Society. I is not, nor never was, in ours. There are Americans, English, Germans, Scotch and Irish, and no man can say that he was made any less of, or that any such thing was made a test of. The majority of the men are of Irish birth; Scotchmen and Englishmen, have held the highest offices in the Society, and are now among its truest members. In Lynn, Hopkinton, and Randolph, it is different, and the majority are Americans; no one cares, so a man is true and capable, where he came from. It is strange that such a feeling is in Quincy. It is as much the interest of the American workman, to get good wages, as any other man; and good wages never can be kept where there is not a Trade-Society. It is such men as 'W' and the 'Sergeant,' that find their interest in the downfall of a society; their motives may be as pure as possible, but they reap a little of the benefits of the strike. Many of them are at work, on work they could not get in any other way, while the men they betrayed, are doing the best they can. How the matter will end is difficult to tell. The men up to this gain every day in future. BOOTMAKER.

Health—what is it? Disease—what is it?

MR. EDITOR:—Health and joy to Pro Aris! In his attempt to give a practical definition of health, so well did he succeed to his own mind in four and three-fourths lines of your columns, that he instantly danced on a field yet unexplored by himself, and the whole host of noble doctors of all times past and present. His definition of health may be a useful one so far as it goes, and no one need lose a wink of sleep over it. Let him slumber over the remainder, and perhaps on his awakening he may think of something wanting.

And now, what of the "new fangled notions," he represents as "sound"? Only that what is new, is not true; and what is true, is not new. By fortune, or mishap, the new are matters of knowledge to me these twenty-five years—"long, long ago," were they in print. Not true, as all experience in life shows that theory and experiment sometimes disagree, and none of the ics, isms, nor pathys in medicine are an exception to the rule. With this disposal of his notions of the vital actions, and the essential properties of life in health and disease, it is needless to add more at present.

And what, also, of the modus operandi of medicines? Only that, according to his statement, two lucky men—monied gentlemen, Drs. Phillips and Thrall, are in the market desirous of buying for the paltry sum of one thousand dollars or less, something neither possess, and that passes their finding out. They are both unwilling to study and labor for it, as "poor sinners" are obliged to do—that would be beneath the dignity of monied gentlemen—and having money, very innocently suppose they can buy it. Well, perhaps they can, and if they can there is no reason under the sun, the earth, or the sea, why it wouldn't do them good, and that they shouldn't have it. It seems, moreover, that each of these monied gentlemen are desirous of acting as both judge and jury on the matter of the purchase, and exhibit at the outset strong symptoms that they do not intend to be convinced against their will. An excellent jury certainly—just the kind to acquit or condemn "a fellow critter" on trial for crime, whether guilty or innocent. No—not exactly that, but a squint to the safety of the money in the strong box.

Be all that as it may, there are gentlemen second to no Drs. Phillips, Thrall, and even Pro Aris himself, of intelligence, industry, and usefulness, who find no difficulty in satisfying their reason and judgement on this subject. They act upon it, and obtain as fair a share of success in the treatment of disease as do those who differ with them; and that they do not boast of it, may be found in the fact that they know nothing of the happy facility of some folks in getting into public print, sometimes for notoriety, and occasionally, for their "daily bread and butter." Reflections on the Great Battle of Solferino — English opinion. — Superiority of the French for prompt action. — Kossuth. — French Emperor.—Demise of Hon. Rufus Choate.

Our European news are up to the 7th inst., all of course in favor of the Allies and disastrous to Austria. The great battle of Solferino, recently fought, is to take its place in a prominent page of the history of our times. It was truly a sanguinary battle, fiercely contested by nearly four hundred thousand men, from sunrise to sunset, of a summer's day; and it went against the Austrians, who were defeated but not broken, by an enemy inferior in numbers, but superior in intelligence and arms; at least, such is the opinion of the London press. Why did the Austrians lose this great battle, asks the London Times. Why have they lost every battle that has been fought in this war? It is not because they are less brave than the French. In this very engagement, according to the official accounts of each army, the Austrians killed and wounded twelve thousand Frenchmen with a loss to themselves of nine thousand killed and wounded. There could have been no flight when the numbers stand thus at the end of the day. Nor are the Austrians inferior as marksmen. Their riflemen hit seven hundred and twenty French officers, whereof, one hundred and twenty were shot dead; while the French succeeded in killing and wounding only two hundred and thirty of the Austrian officers. After a high commendation on the superior activity and impulsiveness of the French, the London Times sums up the whole, that while the Austrians were good marksmen with small arms, and did not lack in bravery or discipline, the battle of Solferino was won by the superiority of the French Artillery, thrown at a distance of two miles into the enemy's ranks; the shells from the French rifled cannon fell at distances where the old guns of the Austrians could not reply. Every one [illegible] men, had arrived at the seat of war, and issued a proclamation, calling the Hungarian nation to arms, to struggle for liberty, and announces that he would soon be among them. The Emperor Napoleon it is said would return to Paris by the middle of July, having obtained glory enough for one campaign.

From Washington we hear but little. By reason of the low state of the finances, all departments of the government are curtailing their expenses, by the dismission within a few months of a large number of government officers. The President has gone to Bedford Springs for a fortnight's recreation. This beautiful watering place is situated among the mountains in the southwest part of Pennsylvania, near the Virginia line, and some one hundred and fifty miles west of Lancester, the home of Mr Buchanan.

It is expected that at the monumental celebration at Plymouth, on the Second of August, the Hon. Stephen A. Douglas will be present. If so, the people will have a good chance of seeing (if he lives,) the next President of the United States, perhaps.

Our city has been in mourning for a week past, by reason of the death at Halifax of Hon. Rufus Choate, who was on his way to England, but was prevented by illness from proceeding any further. The immediate cause of his death was supposed to be heart disease. Resolutions expressive of deep grief at the death of Mr. Choate, and setting forth his exalted virtues and talents, have been passed by the board of Aldermen, the Young Men's Democratic Club, and by the members (at a large meeting) of the Suffolk Bar. The resolutions urge that his memory should be cherished as a pure patriot and conservative statesman, worthy the best days of our republic, while an immortality of flame awaits him as the most brilliant orator, the most consummate advocate, the most learned jurist, and the most accomplished scholar, whose combined gifts have shed lustre on the American bar. An Enquiry.

We should like to know if the School Committee have passed an order that the Grammar School in the South District, should commence at eight o'clock in the morning and close at two o'clock in the afternoon, so that the teacher could have sufficient time to transact other business. We have heard numerous complaints from parents of the scholars attending this School, concerning this new movement. And why should not this system be uniform through all the schools in the District and the town; if the teacher has not salary enough to keep the school at the usual and proper hours, increase the pay so that he can. SOUTH DISTRICT.

For the Patriot.

Pro Aris.

MR. EDITOR:—The assertion that Hahnemann attributed all chronic disease to Psora, or itch, is not quite true. The simple fact is, he observed and brought into notice the idea that many internal maladies were induced by the retrocession of an eruptive disease.

I think Pro Aris ought to be more consistent. He denied that sulphuric acid, or any chemical agent could act on the living body. And, in his last article, he acknowledged that "poisons have a destructive tendency" to act.

If Observer were to offer a hundred dollars to any one who could prove that Pro Aris does not wear long ears, it would be nearly equal to the offers which were quoted so triumphantly by our hero.

Would the Medical Faculty of Yale College take any notice of such buncombe?

Still we may accord to Pro Aris all due praise, but not for his "new fangled" discovery of a definition of health, for the most of his "new ideas," are to be found in all the old works of medical practice.

BLACK ROCK HOUSE. We would call attention to the advertisement of Mr. J. W. Hayden, the popular proprietor of this celebrated house, which may be found in another column of our paper. Black Rock House is situated about fourteen miles distant, which may be reached over a pleasant road, and through a rich and highly cultivated country. It is a pleasant ride in the cool of the morning—which those who have enjoyed it know how to appreciate. This house is admirably located for a summer resort. It stands upon a high bluff, on the outskirts of the town, commanding an uninterrupted seaview, as far as the eye can reach. Boston harbor with its numerous islands is spread out like a map in the distance. The waters abound in fish of the cheicest kinds. Even the smelt, unknown to us at this season of the year, is found there in plenty. Mr. H. is unremitting in his attentions to the comforts of his visitors. He has accommodations for large or small parties. His larder is always well stocked, and his boats ever ready for such as court the pleasures of the briny deep. Our advice, therefore, is, to those seeking health or amusement, to put themselves under the treatment of mine host of the Rock H[illegible]

☞ Of all the salves ever produced, there is none equal to "My Mother's Salve." It will do all it professes to, in the healing art. No one should be without it. See advertisement.

☞ Artificial teeth are troublesome things, unless the fit is easy and firmly fixed. Dr. Stocking, No. 19 Tremont Row, Boston, with an experience of twenty-five years, knows exactly how to regulate those matters. The quality of his work cannot be surpassed, and his terms are exceedingly low.

Poetry.

One Pair of Stockings to Mend To-night.

An old wife sat by her bright fireside,
Swaying thoughtfully to and fro,
In an ancient chair whose creaky craw
Told a tale of long ago;
While down by her side on the kitchen floor,
Stood a ba-ket of worsted balls—a score.

The good man dozed o'er the latest news,
Till the light of his pipe went out;
And unheeded, the kitten with cunning paws,
Rolled and tangled the balls about;
Yet still sat the wife in the ancient chair,
Swaying to and fro in the fire light glare.

But anon, a misty tear-drop came
In her eye of faded blue,
Then trickled down in a furrow deep,
Like a single drop of dew;
So deep was the channel,—so silent the stream,
The good man saw naught but the dimmed eye beam.

Yet marvelled he much that the cheerful light
Of her eye had weary grown,
And marvelled he more at the tangled balls,—
So he said in a gentle tone,
"I have shared thy joys since our marriage vow, Conceal not from me thy sorrows now."

Then she spoke of the time when the basket there
Was filled to the very brim,
And now there remained of the goodly pile
But a single pair—for him.
Then wonder not at the dimmed eye light;
There's but one pair of stockings to mend to-night.

I cannot but think of the busy feet,
Whose wraplings were wont to lay
In the basket, awaiting the needle fleet,—
Now wandered so far away;
How the sprightly steps to a mother dear,
Unheeded fell on the careless ear.

For each empty nook in the basket old,
By the hearth there's an empty seat;
And I miss the shadows from off the wall,
And the patter of many feet;
'Tis for this that a tear gathered over my sight,
At the one pair of stockings to mend to-night.

'Twas said that far through the forest wild,
And over the mountains bold,
Was a land whose rivers and darkening caves,
Were gemmed with the rarest gold;
Then my first born turned from the oaken door,
And I knew the shadows were only four.

Another went forth on the foaming wave
And diminished the basket's store—
But his feet grew cold—so weary and cold—
They'll never be warm any more—
And this nook, in its emptiness, seemeth to me,
To give forth no voice but the moan of the sea.

Two others have gone towards the setting sun,
And made them a home in its light,
And fairy fingers have taken their share,
To mend by the fireside bright;
Some other basket their garments fill—
But mine! Oh! mine is emptier still.

Another—the dearest—the fairest—the best—
Was taken by the angels away,
And clad in a garment that waxeth not old,
In a land of continual day.
O! wonder no more at the dimned eye-light,
While I mend the one pair of stockings to-night.

On Listening to a Cricket

I love, thou little chirping thing,
To hear thy melancholy noise;
Though thou to fancy's ear may sing
Of summer past and fading joys.

Thou canst not now drink dew from flowers,
Nor sport along the traveller's path;
But, through the winter's weary hours,
Shalt warm thee at my lonely hearth.

And when my lamp's decaying beam
But dimly shows the lettered page,
Rich with some ancient poet's dream,
Or wisdom of a purer age,—

Then will I listen to thy sound,
And, musing o'er the embers pale
With whitening ashes strewed around,
The forms of memory unveil,—

Recall the many colored dreams
That fancy fondly weaves for youth,
When all the bright illusion seems
The pictured promises of Truth;

Perchance observe the fitful light,
And its faint flashes round the room,
And think some pleasures feebly bright
May lighten thus life's varied gloom.

I love the quiet midnight hour,
When Care and Hope and Passion sleep,
And reason with untroubled power
Can her late vigils duly keep.

I love the night; and sooth to say,
Before the merry birds that sing
In all the glare and noise of day,
Prefer the cricket's grating wing.

Anecdotes.

Do you know, Harry, that I come very near marrying that girl?

No! is that so?

Yes: I kept company with her for some time. Folks said it was a match, sure. Well, you see the way of it was this: One night when I was seeing her home from conference meeting, I asked her if she would accept me, and she said she had rather be excused, and I was so excited, and such a confounded fool besides, that I excused her!

Wife, said a tyrannical husband to his much abused consort, I wish you to make me a pair of false bosoms.

I should think, replied she, that one bosom as false as yours is, would be sufficient.

Says an astronomer to a bright eyed girl, when talking of rainbows, did you ever see a lunar bow, Miss?

I have seen beaux by moonlight, if that's what you mean, was the rejoinder.

Speaking of shaving, said a pretty girl to an obdurate old bachelor, I should think that a pair of handsome eyes would be the best mirror to shave by.

Yes, many a poor fellow has been shaved by them, the wretch replied.

The Torn Newspaper.

I will not consent to your marriage with William Appleton, Ida, said Charles Redington, with a flushed look and angry eyes.

If I love William more than I love you, Charles, why should you be angry? This is not the way to make me love you better than William. If I cannot be your wife I can be your friend. You have paid me a compliment I shall always be grateful for, in offering me your hand. I feel deeply the preference of me over other and fairer maidens of your acquaintance, and who I know would be made happy by such an offer. Nay, do not look displeased! Because I refuse to be your wife, is no reason that I cannot esteem you as a friend.

Thus calmly, and gently, and sensibly, spoke Ida Boyd, a sweet beautiful girl of eighteen—the daughter of a poor widow—to a rich young man of uncontrollable passions, who had loved her long, and would have made her his wife; for though poor, she was socially his equal, her father having been a gentleman of fortune, who became reduced before his death, through the failure of a bank, in which he had invested all he was worth.

They were standing at the garden gate, to which he had asked her to accompany him after having called to see her, saying that he wished to say a few words to her alone. These few words was the offer of his hand and fortune. Her reply was, that she had been a month engaged to William Appleton. His angry exclamation of disappointment called from her the words of remonstrance and kindness which she addressed to him at the beginning of our tale.

Love or hatred! he replied almost fiercely. I must either love or hate you, Ida Boyd! There is no medium with me! As for William Appleton, may the de——

Charles! Charles! stop where you are. This conduct is unworthy of you, and painful to me, she cried, laying her hand upon his arm, which he pettishly withdrew from her touch. If I cannot love you why will you hate me? Does not this show your love for me was not such as would stand the test of life?

Ida — talk not thus! My love for you would have made me die for you! Yesterday, if you had bidden me do any deed involving the risk of my life, I would have marched, with a smile upon my lips, to death, so that I felt that you approved.

She looked in his face. The moonlight gleaming through a lattice of leaves above their heads, fell in soft splendor upon his forehead; for his head was uncovered as he spoke to the fair object of his worship. There was a momentary silence; she broke it by saying, Charles, I am very, very sorry for you! I ——

Pity me not! Your pity adds poison to the barb you have so completely fastened in my heart. Hate me, Ida, hate me! That will be the most grateful return you can make me, for robbing me of yourself.

Charles, said the lovely girl, as she took his reluctant hand in hers; dear Charles, my friend, how can you blame me? How can you feel so? Love is a mystery. I do not know why I chose William rather than you.

He has known you but ten months, while I have known you from a child.

I know it, Charles. I have always liked you. Do you not remember how I have so often given you flowers; and how you used to love to carry my heavy satchel of books home for me; and how you gave me birds and rabbits for pets, and I named them after you; and how you used to do my hard sums for me, and what good friends we used to be?

Yes, I remember it all; and we were very happy; and when I grew up, and you grew up, and became so beautiful, I resolved you should be my wife; but then came this stranger and—and———

Here the emotion, if not a gush of tears, of the young man, choked his utterance, and he turned away without finishing the sentence.

As I said, Charles, love is a mystery. I loved him as soon as I saw him. I don't know how it was, but our eyes no sooner met than our hearts seemed to fly together and embrace like long absent friends.

The disappointed lover made no immediate reply. He walked for a few moments to and fro before the garden gate. There was a cloud visible upon his brow, and a stern fixedness of the lip which alarmed her. She approached him gently, and said, Charles!

Well, Miss Boyd!

Do not speak to me so unkindly.

What matters it? Are you anything to me? Am I anything to thee? Are you not his? I do well to speak unkindly! But forgive me, Ida! I am not angry with you. Poets say love cannot be helped! But as for him, who knowing how I loved you, and who has come between me and happiness ———

Say no word in anger, Charles. For my sake, do not be angry with William.

For thy sake.

Yes, may I not ask this?

Ida, what do I owe you that for your sake I should not hate him?

Nothing; but oh, forgive me! I knew not that you loved me so dearly. You never told me till to-night.

Because I did not think it necessary to tell thee, he observed bitterly. I thought you understood the looks of my eyes, the touch of my hand, the tone of my voice. To tell you that I loved you would have seemed like painting the rainbow, or lending torches to the light of the stars! but alas, I see I have been mistaken! The love of this world to secure itself, must gabble and speak itself out, or the loudest goose will be the victor.

You are very bitter, Charles.

Pardon me, but I feel bitterly. Good night, Ida.

Let us part friends.

Friends. Eh? Friends? What does that mean? Not enemies?

More than that, Charles! Let us part friends.

Not enemies! answered the young man as he coldly received in his own her soft hand, with which she warmly clasped his. I can never hate thee! When I die, Ida, your image will be found engraven upon my inmost heart. Good night. If I never more speak to thee, do not imagine I hate thee. But I can never look again upon the form which is possessed by my rival. Good night.

He left the gate and walked rapidly onward. She impulsively followed him half a dozen steps, but seeing he paid no attention to her pursuing feet, though he must have heard them upon the pavement, she stopped, clasped her hands together upon her bosom, sighed heavily, and said, oh, that I had before known, how Charles loved me. Yet he never told me his love. He was so diffident and distant, while William pressed his suit with such fervor. Poor Charles. I wish he could understand that I love him (as a friend) though William is to be my husband.

Wi po-will; wi-po-will! cried in plaintive notes, a whippoorwill, in the top of a neighboring tree.

What a doleful cry. This bird's note sounds ominously, and makes me feel fear! she said, as she returned slowly to the gate. They say it sings thus only when some evil is to happen to the hearer. Shall I go in or wait for William? she soliloquized, as she lingered by the gate, held half-open in her hand. He was to be here at nine o'clock, and the bell for nine will soon ring.

The young girl, with a torn heart—for she loved both lovers (but William most and tenderest, having also pledged him her hand, heart, and troth)—lingered long after the nine o'clock bell had rung, for William had promised her he would come at nine. With every note of the bell, she expected to hear blendid the sound of his footstep. Half past nine came, and her mother came out to her and said, Ida, you ought to be in, dear. Where is William?

Not come yet, mother. I wonder what has detained him.

Perhaps some engagement. You know he is but a clerk, and hasn't his time to himself, poor young man, as Mr. Redington has, who is rich. I must confess, I am surprised you should have selected the poor one.

He selected me, mother.

But you know that on the least encouragement the richer would have asked you.

I did not encourage him because he was rich. I could not trust myself. I feared I might be thinking of his fortune; so I let the one who offered first have my hand.

Well, William is a good young man, and will make you happy. But you know my opinion. I would rather you would have married Mr. Redington. That fine house his mother lives in would have been yours at her death; with a carriage, and all that.

Don't talk of such things, mother. They do not come into my thoughts. I shall be perfectly happy with William. And since I have seen the exhibition of anger and feeling shown by Charles this evening, I see he has a fearful temper, which might have made me wretched as his wife.

Well, come in dear child. It is full a quarter to ten. Honest people ought to be in bed by half an hour after bell-ringing.

I will come in soon, dear mamma. I think William will be here by ten. I will just meet him at the gate here, and say good night to him. He was to bring me a wedding ring.

Well, at ten you must come in. Tie your handkerchief over your head, Ida, for I feel there is a dew.

Ten was struck by the old clock in the house, but Ida's lover had not come. She waited till ten minute's past, when, slowly and wonderingly, she returned to the house.

He has never failed me before, she said; but perhaps something has detained him. It cannot be that now that I am engaged to him he loves me less, and thinks he need not be so punctual to his engagements as he was not sure of me and was trying to win my consent!

How sensitive, how jealous, how exacting is true love.

Ida re-entered the house, and by and by retired, but not until all hope of seeing William that night had expired.

In the morning she dreamed a dream. She believed that she was walking arm-in-arm with William, by the side of the river, when a mermaid rose before them out of the water, and said in a harsh voice, "Come, I have waited for you! You must go with me! My home in the depth of the river is ready!

She thought that the mermaid so fascinated William, that he left her side, and went as by a resistless spell, to the syren, who was about to entwine her arms about him, when some one cried, as if from the air, "Fire and slay her, or she will [illegible]

She heard at that moment a report, as if from behind her, and saw William with a wound in his forehead, fall into the arms of the syren, who plunged with him into the river and disappeared. There was a mocking laugh behind her, and she thought the voice sounded like that of Charles Redington. She turned to see if her worst fears were true, when the loud voice of her mother awoke her.

Awake child! Up Ida! There is fearful news!

What is it mother? she cried, starting from her vivid dream.

William ———

William is dead! she shrieked, catching the words from the palid lips of her mother. I saw him shot? Is it not so? Oh, do not be silent!

News has just come that he was found in ———

In the river with a bullet wound in his forehead.

How wonderful and true! cried two or three neighbors who were at her bed-room door; while a third said, how could she know this?

Yes, answered the minister, who lived near, and having heard the news, had hastened to the house of mourning, as become his office. He was found dead an hour ago by the shore, half in the water. He had been shot in the forehead. His body is taken to his mother where an inquest will be held.

Oh, William! William! who could have done this? Dead! William dead! she shrieked, and fell insensible into the arms of her mother.

* * * * * *

The death of William Appleton, by violence, in so mysterious a manner, created the most profound excitement throughout the peaceful village. He was beloved and popular, and was not known to have an enemy. He had been found by the bank, his body half in the water; but as his clothing and hair were thoroughly wetted it was believed that he had been thrown in and floated ashore. The place where he was found was about half-way between the village and the residence of Ida Boyd, by the road that led along the winding and shady banks.

He must have been going to see her or coming from there, said a woman who was present as they were holding the inquest. He was engaged to her, and went to see her every night.

This opinion prevailed. The question now came up, who could have done this? and what could have been the motive?

There was no suspicion of person or motive, and so the jury gave in their verdict, "Shot dead with a pistol or gun, by some person or persons unknown, and then thrown into the river."

What could a coroner's jury, not omniscient nor omnipresent, decide? The funeral took place on the third day, and was attended by a vast concourse of people; for a murder invests death with a fearful mystery, which arouses the deepest sympathies of the human heart, as well as the liveliest curiosity of our nature.

But there were agencies of Providence at work for the discovery of the murderer. The surgeon who had been called to examine and pronounce upon the nature of the wound, had drawn from the orifice made by the bullet, a piece of paper saturated with the river water. He saw that it was newspaper wadding, which had been driven into the wound behind the ball. He stated to the coroner, from this circumstance, that the assassin must have stood close to his victim, for the wadding to have also entered the wound. This assertion threw no light upon the author of the crime, and had little weight with the coroner and his rustic jury. The surgeon, who was a shrewd man of the world, and who let nothing escape him, took the wadding home, and, having removed the stains of blood and dried it, closely examined it, and discovered that it was a part of a newspaper called the Evening Star.

Dr. Thomas, upon looking carefully at this fragment, compressed his lips, and was for a few moments silent, fixing his keen, gray eyes upon the floor.

The Evening Star! he at length exclaimed, or rather muttered. I wonder who takes the paper in this village; this I must quickly ascertain. I said before the coroner that this piece of paper might be probably a clue to the murderer, and I did not wish to make any noise about it, lest the murderer himself might be present at the inquest and take the alarm. I think I have shown my usual sagacity. Now, with the aid of Providence, I may find out who murdered William Appleton. Poor Ida Boyd! They say it has broken her heart, as they were soon to be married! The Evening Star! Stay there, bit of paper, he added, until I look further.

As he spoke, he locked the wadding in a drawer, and putting the key in his pocket, walked out. He took the direction of the post office, which he entered with a loitering step, as if he had no purpose. The postmaster was seated in his great arm-chair, (being a bent up, rheumatic man, with iron spectacles) actually reading a copy of the Evening Star.

Dr. Thomas was a friend and his physician. After a question or two as to the present state of his rheumatism, the medical man said, a New York paper, eh?

Yes, the Star; Noah's paper. They say he is a Jew; but he is a great wit and a capital writer.

So I've heard. Do you take it?

No. He is on the other side of my politics. It comes here to Mrs. Redington, whose husband you know, was a great politician. You see her name on it.

Yes, I see. It is such an interesting paper, I suppose many copies of it are taken in the village?

No. This is the only one taken here at this office. It is usually taken out by her son Charles, but he has not been here for several days; So I thought I would peep into it.

A privilege, replied the smiling doctor, which you postmasters take, not only with papers, but with letters, eh!

Ah, doctor, that is a serious joke! replied the man of privileges, as he folded up the paper, for at that moment Charles Redington entered, and asked for his papers and letters.

So you keep up the old Star subscription, sir, like your father, said the doctor.

The young man answered with a curl on the lip, I suppose one can subscribe to what paper he pleases! and thus saying, he went out of the office.

Dr. Thomas wended his way to his own house, slowly and thoughtfully. Charles Redington was above suspicion — wealthy, son of a member of Congress, born in the village, and of good name and fame. Yet he was the only one that took the Star, and it was a torn portion of the Star which formed the wad of the bullet!

It is possible another may have found or torn the paper. Perhaps he does not file them, and throws them away. If so, any one might pick them up. I must be cautious. I will call on his mother, and ask her for a loan of a volume of the folio Encyclopædia, which belonged to her husband. This will enable me to look around, and perhaps learn something.

Thus he mused as he walked on. The next day he called on the widow, and was shown into the library for the book by Charles himself, who looked pale and ill at ease; so much so, that the doctor said, Mr. Redington, you do not look well. You must look after yourself.

The young man laughed and turned away his head. Upon a chair the doctor saw, piled in a heap, a great number of the Star. He took up one, and said: This is a singularly American Journal, Mr. Redington, to be edited by a Jew.

I seldom read it. I am not a politician. I keep it as waste paper.

Ah, indeed! Permit me to look over some of them.

Yes; but you will excuse me, as I have an engagement. You can borrow any other books you please besides the Encyclopædia

After the young man had gone, the doctor proceeded to examine the newspapers upon the chair, but found them all whole; but seeing one wrapped around a parcel upon the table he approached it and saw that it contained melon seed. A portion of this paper was torn off. A glance showed him that he had the missing part in his drawer at his own house!

Instantly and adroitly he poured out the seeds and secured the paper. He was overwhelmed with surprise and pain. As he was leaving, Mrs. Redington met him in the hall, and said, after a few remarks about books, have they discovered the murderer, doctor?

Not yet, I believe.

Poor Ida! Charles thought worlds of her, and has not been himself since he heard how she is almost beside herself. I think he loved her; but I always told him she was too poor a match for him. I am very sorry for her and for the poor young man.

The doctor left and proceeded to his house, took the wad and went to the residence of the justice of the peace. The two gentlemen remained closeted together for an hour. That night Charles Redington was arrested while at the table, by two officers of the law, and conveyed to prison.

He denied all knowledge of the murder and assumed the front and bearing of injured innocence. He was, in due time, brought into court for trial. The only ground of evidence against him was the fragment of newspaper. But the defence ably argued that the assassin, whoever he was, might have stolen the paper, as no such paper was to be found on the prisoner's premises, or brought it with him from another town.

The Star circulates four thousand copies weekly, he added; and there are four thousand Chances that my client is innocent.

When every body in court looked for an acquittal, the torn newspaper, which the doctor had taken from the library, with Mrs. Eleanor Redington's name upon it, was produced, and the fragment fitted to it before all eyes.

When Charles Redington saw this paper produced, he uttered a cry of despair and sprang from the prisoner's box so unexpectedly, that he had reached and leaped from an open window before he could be arrested. Mounted men followed his wild flight, and he was arrested upon the very spot where the body of William had been discovered. The result was, that he confessed in prison the deed of murder so clearly established by circumstantial evidence. He said he had gone home after leaving Ida Boyd, loaded his pistol, tearing off a portion of the Star for the wadding, resolved to meet Appleton on his return from his visit to Ida Boyd, and compel him to relinquish her to himself. That he met him on his way, and upon his refusal to comply with his demand, he shot him in a moment of uncontrollable jealousy.

Three months afterwards, Charles Redington expiated his crime on the gallows, and the evening of the same fatal day the dead body of the fair Ida Boyd was laid in her last home.

Ladies Travelling.

Our wives and daughters loose three-fourths of the pleasures of summer travel, by the inexcusable, the execrable perversion of true taste and common sense, in dressing for a rail-car or a steamboat, as if they were going to a court reception. It does seem that they have no more sense of the fitness of things than idiots. Cannot some few gentlemen have their own way for once, and thereby set the fashion by dressing the families for a summer travel in plain, substantial garments, allowing no member anything beyond what a small carpet bag would contain, and which should be the sole article which each one was to take care of. Let us all "put ourselves upon our behavior," and not on our dress.

The fact is, the clerks and proprietors of hotels, the captains of steamboats, and the conductors of railroads, see at the very first glance, the real status of a traveller; the dullest chambermaid, the most stupid cabin-boy, and the laziest waiter, are neither dull, nor stupid, nor lazy, nor erring either, in the estimate they make of people, as if by intuition. At "first sight" they don't see the dazzling watch chain; the fancy vest; the shiny hat; the point lace veil; the embroidered handkerchief; the cashmere shawl; the thousand dollar dress, and boundless crinoline; it is that presence which the face and features and countenance diffuse around, sustained by a gait, and manner, and modulation of voice which the brightest of them can never describe, but which the meanest intellect of them all cannot help but see and feel, at the instant of a first glance.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Scare Crows

This is the time of year for our corn-fields to exhibit all sorts of artistic ingenuity, in the shape of old clothes statuary, and very odd and expressive tableaux, as well as a great extent of never-ending twine—glittering pieces of tin hung on poles, by ever twisting and twisting strings—old coffee pots, and dilapidated hats; all to intimidate that very sable, but sagacious bird, the crow. Mr. Crow generally laughs in his sleeve at all this expenditure of cast off toggery, and takes what corn he wants before the farmer is up, or in his house at his meals, or gone to meeting, or absent from the premises from any other cause.

The best mode ever adopted to keep this inveterate old poacher from pulling up corn, was to surround him with assailants of his own kind—make bird fight bird. We once set up a couple of martin boxes on poles in our corn field. These were occupied by families of martins; and woe fell upon every crow's poor devoted head that dared to show itself anywhere near the premises. They were out as early as Mr. Crow himself, and ready to give battle all summer, or, until the young had flown, and they got ready to migrate South. There was many a battle fought over the field, but no corn was pulled up that year.—Maine Farmer.

Facts about Lightning.

Mr. E. Merriman, the "sage of Brooklyn Heights," in a recent letter, says:—

A few days since a stranger accosted me in the street and inquired if iron bedsteads were dangerous to sleep upon during thunder storms. I said in reply that I had never known a death by lightning on a bed resting on an iron bedstead, but we have recorded deaths by lightning of persons reposing on feather beds on wooden bedsteads.

No case of death has yet occurred to a telegraph operator—to persons on board of steamboats or in railroad cars, or in iron vessels or iron buildings, or in vessels furnished with lightning conductors, and but four deaths in buildings furnished with lightning rods. Two persons have been killed by lightning while standing on the outside platform of railroad cars.

Many persons suffer greatly from fear during thunder storms, and that fear has, in two cases which have come to our knowledge, produced death. It will be a comfort to such to know the safety which railroad cars, steamboats, iron vessels, and vessels and buildings furnish with rods afford during storms. Persons struck down by lightning should be thoroughly drenched with cold water. We have the record of a case of resuscitation after hours of drenching; therefore do not be discouraged, but continue drenching till animation is restored. The season of the year for the frequent occurence of thunder storms is at hand, and this notice may be the means of doing some good.

A Codfish Customers.

An incident worth laughing over, is told of a man who had an infirmity, as well as an appetite for fish. He was anxious to keep up his character for honesty, even while enjoying his favorite meal; and while making a bill with his merchant, as the story goes, and when his back was turned, the honest buyer slipped a codfish up under his coat tail. But the garment was too short to cover up the theft, and the merchant perceived it.

Now, said the customer, anxious to improve all opportunities to call attention to his virtues, Mr. Merchant, I have traded with you a great deal, and have paid you promptly, and honestly, haven't I?

O yes, said the merchant, I make no complaint.

Well, said the customer, I always insisted that honesty is the best policy, and the best rule to live and die by.

That's so, replied the merchant.

And the customer turned to depart.

Hold on, friend, cried the merchant, speaking of honesty, I have a bit of advice to give you. Whenever you come to trade again you had better wear a longer coat, or steal a shorter codfish

How to Make Money.

Let the business of everybody else alone, and attend to your own; do not buy what you do not want; use every hour to advantage, and study to make even leisure hours useful; think twice before you throw away a shilling—remember you will have another to make for it; find recreation in looking after your business, and so your business will not be neglected in looking after recreation; buy low; sell fair; look over your books regularly, and if you find an error, trace it out; should a stroke of misfortune come upon you in trade, retrench, work harder, but "never fly the track;" confront difficulties with unflinching perseverance, and they will disappear at last; though you should even fail in the struggle, you will be honored; shrink from the task, and you will be despised. By following these rules, however, you need never say "fail;" pay your debts promptly, and so exact your dues; keep your word.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, July 30th, 1859.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

DARING ATTEMPT AT ROBBERY. The private room occupied by the Depot Master of the O. C. R. in this town, was forcibly entered, at noon, on Tuesday last, while the occupants were at dinner. In so public a place, at mid-day, when people where coming and leaving the building, it was a daring feat, which must have been perpetrated by a bold and reckless adventurer. The entrance was effected through the window used for the delivery of tickets, to the gentlemen's apartment. The damage was trifling,—no property was taken—Mr Gay, carrying the deposits home with him. It is thought, from appearances, that the rogue, whoever he was, had not time to consummate his plans. That he became frightened, and beat a hasty retreat through a window in the rear of the building.

STILL ANOTHER. The Furnishing Room of Mr. Lombard, over Elbridge Clapp's store, and adjoining our office, was also entered, during the evening of Thursday last, by some of the light-fingered gentry, by placing a ladder against the north side of the building, and raising a window, by removing the fastening, though a broken pane of glass — We are sorry to learn that Mr. Lombard's loss is near upon two hundred dollars, in cloths and ready-made clothing, which bears heavily upon him at this dull season of the year. The goods taken, were of the best kind, a presumption, that the rogues had some taste in such matters. From certain indications, it would seem, that the perpetrators must have previously acquainted themselves with the premises. We are sadly in want of a night police, to protect our property from the depredations of the midnight freebooter. A reward of fifty dollars has been offered for the recovery of the property and the detection of the thief or theives.

PLEASURES IN PROSPECT. The Universalist Society of this town, as appears by their card in our paper of to-day, will hold a Levee, at Abington grove, on Wednesday, the 3d of next month. When they move in such matters, they usually draw a large multitude after them. The spot selected, by nature and art, is admirably adapted for such purposes. It is quite a fashionable resort for Pic-Nics and social parties. These out door festivals have become very fashionable of late; and when conducted in the free and liberal spirit of this Society, are a rich fund of rational amusement—of wild, romantic pleasure.

MEMORIAL. A paper is in circulation, with quite a number of the names of our most influential citizens appended, which it is the intention of the signers, to have presented to the Directors of the Old Colony Railroad, to obtain their consent for the sale of tickets in packages, at rates corresponding with those of yearly or quarterly patrons. The benefit it is thought will be mutual—as it will not only be a great accommodation to the travelling community, but help to increase the sale of tickets. The address is very respectfully drawn up, and we have no doubt, that when the wishes of the petitioners are laid before that body, that their prayer will be readily granted.

DOG DAYS. Our little planet has now entered that part of the heavens, which brings it under the baneful influence of the Dog Star, Sirius. When that Star reigns, we are told, that all bipeds, especially canine, have a strong tendency to run mad; and woe betide poor Tray, if he exhibits any infirmity—he is driven, mid the clatter of tin pans, and the howlings of mischievous boys, to the boundary of civilization, condemned as unworthy to live. That men are not always sane at this season of the year, we have strong presumptive evidence, from a circumstance which happened on Sunday evening last, among the Bootmakers at the South District; it appears that they formed a Society, recently, for their mutual benefit, but have become estranged, and in their madness are trying to destroy one another. Hard words, vile epithets, and law suits have followed in quick succession. If this does not look like aberration of mind, we do not know what does. Fie! gentlemen. If you would be respected by others, learn to respect yourselves; throw your differences to the wind; and let come what will, for your common weal, resolve in future to be united, and stand by one another. Your employers would rejoice at this.

ALARM OF FIRE. A slight fire occurred on Thursday morning last in the dwelling house owned by Mr. Paul Wild, corner of Phipps and Liberty street in this town. Damaged to the amount of fifty dollars. The building was insured at the Quincy Mutual, and the loss was promptly settled. Great credit is due to the Tiger Engine Company, who were immediately on hand, when the alarm was given, and arrested the progress of the fire.

FOREIGN NEWS. The war in Italy is suddenly closed! Within one week we have had the important news, first of an armistice, and next of peace, the bases of which are:—An Italian Confederation under the honorary Presidency of the Pope; the Emperor of Austria concedes his rights in Lombardy to the Emperor of the French, who tranfers them to the King of Sardinia; the Emperor of Austria preserves Venice, but she will form an integral part of the Italian Confederation.

Boston Correspondence.

BOSTON, July 28. 1859.

Health of the City.—Public Schools.—Interesting Items. — Statistical Glance. — The Gubernatorial Question — Governor Banks the People's candidate.—State Conventions.

The weather has been unusually fine for some days past, and the city continues healthy with the sporadic cases of small pox or varioloid, which occur occasionally, in or around Boston, in spite of the sanatory measures of our excellent city physician, Dr Clark. The prophylactic, is vaccination; and all living in the city or coming here, should be vaccinated, if they have not been. Physicians are divided in opinion whether one vaccination is sufficient through life; and where any doubt exists, re-vaccination would certainly do no harm.

The city has been somewhat pleasantly agitated the present week, by reason of the annual School Exhibitions, and Festival. Heretofore, the medal scholars exclusively, dined at Faneuil Hall with the Committee and invited guests. The Festival was changed this year to one more general and intellectual at Music Hall. It was attended with brilliant and triumphant success. Twelve hundred pupils were present, selected from the Grammar, High and Normal scholars, whose music was magnificent. A platform was erected expressly for them in this spacious hall, one seat being placed above another, until the heads of those upon the upper seats were on a level with the upper balcony. The girls were dressed in white. The music was first rate, the speeches eloquent, and it is admitted it was the best annual school festival ever got up in our literary emporium. Perhaps you are not aware that the Boston schools contain within a very small fraction of twenty-five thousand scholars, with fifty-four males and 398 female teachers, and that the amount of taxes raised, for the support of schools, including only the wages of teachers, board, fuel, and the care of fires, is $270.120,50; the State fund, $6.136.79 to be added. But this is not all; the aggregate paid for tuition in unincorporated academies and private schools, is $186,796,00. The number of children between five and fifteen years of age is 29,456; sum appropriated for each pupil $9.17; the average attendance is set down at 72.94. But the County of Norfolk does better; the average attendance being 77.45. Quincy ranks the highest in per centage of valuation appropriated to her public schools, the figures $004 12 being equivalent to mills and hundreds of mills. The amount of her taxes raised for the support of schools last year, being $8 585, or to each of the thirteen hundred and twelve scholars $6.54,3. Brookline with a valuation of $5,436.854,50, with but thirteen schools and six hundred and twenty-eight scholars, gives $19,52,2 to each scholar. The valuation of Quincy is but $2,085,625,38, the fifth highest in the County.

The nomination of State officers begins to be talked about. The Democratic Convention meets at Worcester the 7th of September, and as Mr. Beach has declined a renomination, the Hon. B. F. Butler, and B. F. Hallet, are named in our circles, as candidates for Governor. Both are well known, talented men, but circumstances indicate that Mr. Butler's chance is the best. He is out and out a Douglas man, or favorable to his views. Of Mr. Hallet's sentiments on popular sovereignty, I do not know.

The Republican State Convention meets at Fitchburgh, September 20th. An effort is making in the western part of the State to bring forth the name of ex-Governor Brigg, as a candidate in opposition to our excellent Governor, Hon. Nathaniel P. Banks, but it is no go. He will receive the nomination by a large majority, and walk the course triumphantly, being more of the people's candidate than of any political party; for the very good reason, he makes a good governor; the great body of the people know this self-evident fact, from his whole administration, characterized by uprightness, ability, and fidelity, and they will keep him at the helm of State, as long as he will consent to be there, or until called to a more honorable sphere of public life. X.

RATTLESNAKE. One of these venomous reptiles, was killed by Mr. E. A. Spear, of the South District, at Pine Hill, on Wednesday last, while on a gunning excursion. When discovered, he was lying directly across the path, basking in the rays of a noon-day sun. He shew no signs of fear, when approached, merely raising his head a few inches, to take an observation, which Mr. S. improved by a well-directed shot. It measured four and a half feet in length, and had eleven rattles. Allowing three years for the appearance of the first, its age must have been fourteen years—quite an old inhabitant. The Rattlesnake is very singular in its habits—sluggish, even when danger is near, in its movements—deadly in its strike—generous as a foe, always giving warning, before an attack. At the West and South, where they abound they are not held in much dread, as they have an antidote against the poison in a plant, common in those parts, known as the "Rattlesnake week." Its most inveterate foes, are the deer, black snake, and hog, who, from an instinctive repulsion of its deadly powers, hunt it wherever it is to be found.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK. This old and popular favorite among the magazines of the day, increases in value and interest with each successive number. The last issue comes to us laden with choice reading, the productions of some of our most gifted and talented writers. Its embellishments, also, are excellent—fine specimens of the art—the best of steel engravings. Mr. Godey has been eminently successful as a publisher of light literature, and is now reaping a rich harvest, for a life of devoted labor. It is a favorite with the ladies, and an indispensable ornament for the drawing-room and parlor.

Footmakers' Strike

MR. EDITOR:—As Bootmaker thought it necessary to correct my last communication, let us see what corrections he has made, in a column and a half of your last week's paper, which he inflicted on the public.

I do not notice a single correction, but I do see some false statements. What I said, as regards the firms of B. C. & Co and E. M. & Co. was strictly true; they never did agree not to hire a man who refused to join the Society. The man on B. C. & Co.'s shop that caused the strike of two days and [illegible] Society. And the man on E. M. & Co.'s shop was told that he might do as he pleased, join or not, it was all the same to them.

I should like to ask Bootmaker which of the following statements were true: "The man from Bridgewater, of whom W. speaks so feelingly, was only the occasion of the strike; the causes were of older date. A man resides in Roxbury who has been at work for the shop all along. The men suspected this often; two or three Committees went to the shop about him," &c., or the following quotation copied from his letter in the Boston Herald: "The man who was the primary cause of the present strike, is not an American by birth—he is a foreigner; and it is on a complaint made by an American member, that any other case than his came before the Society."

Does not Bootmaker know that this same American wanted me to draw up a petition to call a special meeting, adding that certain persons had called the Society a d—d Irish Society. I told him I would have nothing to do with a petition for such a purpose. Now, is it not evident, that if I wished to call a special meeting to bring up the American question, there was my chance; and if I did not wish to appear in the plot, I could have made a cat's paw of the man. Bootmaker, you know that it was that American's complaint that brought the whole subject before the meeting, and that the strike could have been avoided, by withdrawing the guarantee for stock that was made way with, or by excepting the three Americans that belonged to the Society.

The fact of it is, that the Society wanted a strike, and those that voted for it, expected that the Bosses would "cave in" in a few days; and as a good number of the men had two seats of work, they were indifferent about the strike.

Bootmaker says, "he, at least, ought to be an advocate for the Society; when he came last to town, he could get one third-more for the kind of work he was doing, than when he left town." This is like the most of his statements concerning me. Is it prompted by malice, or has he no regard for truth? The kind of work that I am making, I received as much pay for before I left town as I do now; so the Society has not benefitted me one cent, but I have lost a great deal of time and money on account of the Society.

I would advise Bootmaker to pay stricter attention to truth, for he must remember that "Truth crushed to earth will rise again,

The eternal years of God are hers;
But error wounded, writhes in pain,
And dies amid her worshippers."

Some of the members of the Society, says that they are ashamed of their President, because he does not tell the truth, and that my articles are strictly true. W.

THE WEATHER.—CROPS, ETC. The season, thus far, has been very favorable for vegetation of every kind. Seasonable and refreshing showers with warm and life-inspiriting sunshine, is carrying vegetation rapidly towards maturity. The hay crop was large and has been secured in fine condition. From other sections of the country, also, the cheering intelligence is received that wheat and the smaller grains never promised better—an abundant yield is almost certain. What a subject, says the moralist, for thanksgiving! Granted; provided the line of communication between the producer and consumer, was not crowded with hungry speculators, who turn an intended blessing into a curse. The poor man has little cause for gratitude, when he is made to starve midst plenty, that worthless paper institutions and other corporate bodies may declare fat dividends.

GOOD NEWS. Most kinds of flour can now be bought in New York city three dollars per barrel cheaper than during the first week of April last.

It is said, and probably with truth, that all dentists can pull teeth without breaking more than one half. But we prefer a scientific dental surgeon, like Dr. Stocking, who never makes a blunder of that kind. His rooms are at No. 19 Tremont Row, Boston.

"MY MOTHER'S SALVE" is now sold by all druggists and apothecaries throughout the country; and all can be supplied with the best article ever introduced. Let those suffering from burns, sores, eruptions, pimples, etc., get a box, which is a sure cure. See advertisement.

Health and Disease.

MR. EDITOR: It is exceedingly amusing to me, the way the doctors dodge the question of health and disease. Observer summarily disposes of my definition, which he called for, by saying "theory and experiment sometimes disagree"; not deigning to explain, out of the abundance of his wisdom, the points of difference which it seems have been to him "matter of knowledge these twenty-five years." W. M. B. merely makes a few quibbles, showing that he does not comprehend the theory which is so repugnant to the drug-doctors.

To be sure I "denied that sulphuric acid or any chemical agent could act on the living body," but that is not at all inconsistent with my saying that "posions have a destructive tendency." For this destructive tendency is the tendency to chemical action, which is constantly combatted and held in check by the vital powers wherever vitality exists, because vital action is superior to chemical action. I did not say anything about "a destructive tendency to act," as W. M. B. imputes, for that would be not only illogical but ungrammatical.

About those offers to discuss the nature of disease, etc., I really do not think the Medical Faculty of Yale College would take any notice of them; and it seems the celestial kink in the doctor's nose will not permit even him to descend to it.

I did not profess to present any "new ideas" in my definition of health. The doctor very carefully avoids the subject of disease. May he be blessed with health.

Observer says I am on "a field yet unexplored by the whole host of noble doctors:" so was Columbus when he sailed to the New World less than four hundred years since, and what has been the result?

People now believe the earth is round instead of flat; and they have since learned that it revolves, and that the sun does not go round it every day as it was supposed to but a few hundred years since.

Perhaps those "gentlemen of intelligence" who are so well satisfied with their "success in the treatment of diseases," in the old way of bleeding, blistering and drugging, will live to learn that some new things are also true, and that "two lucky men," Drs. Phillips and Thrall, and a host of the same sort, have learned by their own "study and labor" the nature of disease, and how to cure it in all its curable forms without a particle of medicine.

Though I did not "lose a wink of sleep" I failed to "think of something wanting" in my definition of health, and hope Observer will have the kindness to divulge the important item. PRO ARIS.

FIRE. About half-past nine o'clock, last evening, a fire was discovered in a barn belonging to H. Gardner Pratt, on Elm street, in this town, which was soon enveloped in one sheet of flame. The barn was filled with hay and other combustible matter, which made it difficult to arrest its progress. The Tiger Engine, was promptly upon the spot, and with the aid of our other efficient Fire Companies, soon subdued its ravages. The cause of the accident, or whether there was any insurance upon the property, we could not learn. This morning, the building has entirely disappeared—nothing remains but a heap of wet, smouldering hay.

ACCIDENT. The eldest son of Mr. Edmund B. Taylor of this town, fourteen years of age, was severely injured on Thursday afternoon last, by a sharp scythe in the hands of another lad. A deep incision was made in the right knee joint, opening the "water-sack" and inflicting a dangerous wound.

The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, by a late decision, sustains the action of the Mayor of Philadelphia in stopping the running of passenger railroad cars in that city on Sundays.

In Buffalo, N. Y., a woman while engaged in washing windows on the outside, made a misstep, fell off, and after revolving once in the air, her hoops became inflated, and she came easily and gracefully to the stone pavement, breaking but two small bones, and those were in her hoops.

Oscar, king of Sweden, died on the 8th inst. He is succeeded by his eldest son, Charles XV., who is thirty-three years old.

A man in Newark (N. J.) has died from cramps and colic in the intestines, produced by swallowing the stones of cherries which he had been eating during the day; a large number of which were found in the stomach.

Quincy, Jan. 10. tf

Poetry.

From the Boston Courier.

To the First Mosquito of the Season.

What tiny voice is this I hear,
Shrill, sharp, but small as clear?
Half waking up, a long-drawn hum,
Dwells on my startled ear;
I'm wide awake though now—
Infantile monster! is it thou?
It is, I vow,
'Thou'rt come!
No other earthly tone
Is like thine own.

I've heard all sorts of noise,—
Yells of uproarious boys;
The yelp of luckless flying cur who feels
The jingling kettle at his heels;
Of swinish herd the grunt,
Which says so plain, "I won't;"
The fiendish waft, the spit, the splutter
Of rival cats high-perched in gutter;
The railing team's fierce scream
Breaking my midnight dream;
Rude tavern guests, late into town,
Who slam their doors their boots dump down,
And far from blessing lake
From slumberers set awake;
Pianos mingling chords the blood to freeze,
Fat fisted urchins thumping on the keys;
Steam-music's most spasmodic pant,
Asking great distance to enchant,
Dry cart-wheels creaking up a crooked hill;
A thousand spinning jennies in a mill;
And that wild din, unparalled on earth,
Of the drear night before the Glorious Fourth.
But for a testing, dogged, desperate note,
To you the palm I vote!
Those end,—or we may fly;
Most ills in time go by;
From you there's no escape: your pipe—
A scold's fret is its only type;
Not more incessant than your strain
Upon the chafing shore the main;
Droning, "I must have blood—
I smell the crimson flood—
And I must live"—the pirate's plea—pray
why?
I think you'd better die.

Whew! whew! no nearer come,
With that confounded hum,
Blood-sucking nap of all!
Away with your long bill.
I know your grandfather, last summer,
A sly dog, and experienced hummer.
Perdu he kept, reposing all the day,
In some dark crevice snugly stowed away;
In vain my morning haunt, my nightly quest,
He rested quiet till I sought my rest;
Just as my weary lids began to droop,
Struck up his trumpet, prelude to his swoop;
I flung my arms about—a nap I feigned—
Rage or finesse was vain—alike he trained.
When I, with very cautious slap,
My nasal organ hit a rap,
I never knew mosquito
More spry his hole to flee to;
At last I gave the contest up,
To slumber I—and he to sup.

Hush! hush! methinks I feel
A gently lighting heel;
And now a sharp proboscis
Quite to my nose too close is;
Brought slowly round with care
My hand hangs poised in air;
Bang! ah, I have you fast—
Wretch, you are dead at last.
Good by, good by, red rover,—
I think I will turn over.

"For Mother's Sake"

A father and his little son
On wintry waves were sailing;
Fast, from their way, the light of day
In cloud and gloom was failing;
And fiercely round there lonely bark,
The stormy winds were wailing.

They knew that peril hovered near;
They prayed, "O heaven, deliver!"
But a wild blast came howling past,
And soon, with sob and shiver,
They struggled in the icy grasp
Of that dark rushing river.

"Cling fast to me, my darling child,"
An anguished voice was crying;
While silvery clear, o'er tempests drear,
Rose softer tones replying;

"Oh, mind not me, my father dear—
I am not afraid of dying;
Oh, mind not me, but save yourself,
For mother's sake, dear father;
Leave me, and hasten to the shore,
Or who will comfort mother?"

The angel forms that ever wait,
Unseen on man attendant,
Flew up, o'erjoyed, to heaven's bright gate,
And there, on page resplendent,
High over those of heroes bold,
And martyrs famed in story,
They wrote the name of that brave boy,
And wreathed it round with glory.

"God bless the child!" ay, he DID bless
That noble self-denial,
And safely bore him to the shore,
Through tempest toil and trial.
Soon in their bright and tranquil home,
Son, sire, and that dear mother,
For whose sweet sake so much was done,
In rapture met each other.

Anecdotes.

An old tar came down to the cabin of Nelson's ship one cold drizzly day, with some message whilst Lady Hamilton was present. Seeing the cold condition of the sailor, she asked which he would prefer—a glass of wine or a glass of brandy.

It don't matter which, replied Jack; but if your ladyship pleases, I can be drinking the wine while you are pouring out the brandy.

Mr. Brown, I owe you a grudge, remember that. I shall not be frightened then, for I never knew you to pay anything you owed.

Mrs. Smith did you say, in the hearing of my little girl, that I was a great rusty cat?

No, my dear Mrs. Jones, I said you were a great aristocrat.

A little girl showing her little cousin, about four years old, a star, said: That star you see up there is bigger than this world.

No, it aint, said he.

Yes, it is.

Then why don't it keep the rain off?

The Evils of One Extravagance.

Twelve dollars did you say, Mrs. Martin? That seems a great sum of money to pay, certainly—and yet what a beauty it is—how well it would become me!

The wily milliner held up the beautiful bonnet and turned it from side to side without a word, so that her customer's longing eye could take in all its soft pink plumes, and delicate wreaths, and sprays of azilina buds.

Just allow me to try it on a moment ma'am.

Mrs. Rivers laid aside the old bonnet—how shabby it looked all on a sudden, with its dull maroon bows and worn plume—and looked complacently into the mirror as the milliner adjusted the bright fabrication of rose colored velvet and broad glistening ribbons on her head.

The little lady might be pardoned a thrill of gratified vanity as she stood there. Yes, she was a pretty creature, with her soft bands of blue-black silken hair, and her large bright eyes, and clear brunette skin, with a rosy glow upon her beautiful cheeks; and the bonnet was wonderfully becoming to her gypsy loveliness. Mrs. Martin knew very well what she was about when she executed her last manœuvre. Mrs. Rivers forgot all about her husband's limited income, and her own wise little notions of wife-like economy; she remembered nothing but the bonnet.

You may send it home this evening for my husband to see; it depends altogether upon his approbation. I hardly know whether he will think it best for me to expend so much upon a bonnet; I believe, upon the whole, however, I may venture to take it.

Oh, yes, ma'am, said the accommodating lady of gauze and artificial flowers, by all means, and if Mr. Rivers don't approve, you can send it back to-morrow morning.

Twelve dollars! The remembrance of that sum haunted Mrs. R. all day. Could she afford to pay so much? Was it not a useless extravagance? And yet, the bonnet was such a beauty, and so cheap at twelve dollars. Henry always liked to see her dressed well, and she could economize in other things.

It was a bright little nook, their family sitting room with its crimson carpet, and the graceful sweep of red damask curtains, and the cheerful glow of the polished grate. No wonder that Henry Rivers looked longingly forward to its home-like warmth and light, during his cold wintry walk from the office; no wonder his face brightened when the three rosy, healthy little ones bounded forward, to meet him as the door opened, and the pretty wife stood on tip-toe for a real honey-moon sort of a kiss.

And after tea, when they were all gathered around the centre table, Henry with his account book and she with her sewing, while Fanny and Alice were busy at their lessons, and Charlie was drawing a "ship," the like of which had never walked the waves, she was almost vexed to hear the tinkle, tinkle, of the door-bell that announced the arrival of the bonnet.

What's all that flippery? A bonnet, hey? said Mr. Rivers, as she took it carefully from the box.

Well, upon my word, it is pretty.

She put it on smiling and blushing at his admiration.

The prettiest piece of nonsense of that kind I ever saw—to say nothing of the little face inside of it, he added gaily.

How much do you think it was?

I don't know—five dollars perhaps?

Five dollars! A pretty judge you are of such matters—it was twelve, and cheap at that.

Twelve dollars! exclaimed Henry in a tone of genuine astonishment, I thought you did not intend to go higher than five this winter?

If you think it is extravagant—commenced Mary, with a look of disappointment!

I don't think anything about it, said her husband, smiling, you are the best judge of what you can afford; your allowance is so much per month, and if by rigid economy you contrive to save enough for a little luxury of this kind, why act your own pleasure about it.

Mary was much relieved; and yet she could not help feeling a little guilty as she took the beautiful bonnet into her own room and laid it away; was it not wrong to buy an article she could not conscientiously afford. But then it was so becoming.

Yes, my dear, said Mrs. Croker, oracularly, it's a love of a bonnet, to be sure; there isn't a lady on the row has one like it, and you do look sweet with it on; but really—

But really what? said Mary, almost impatiently.

You ought to have something beside that old broach shawl of yours to wear with it; it don't correspond at all; I overheard Mrs. Jenkins' laughing at it as I came out of church last Sunday. I don't want to hurt your feelings dear, but I think somebody ought to tell you what people say!

And the spectacled dame—a fair specimen of that class of women who go around saying disagreeable things, and making as much mischief as possible—rose solemnly up, and folding her arms in her bombazine cloak, declared she must positively be going.

Mary fairly cried with vexation when she was gone.

But the old lady's insinuation rankled in her mind, so it is scarcely to be wondered at that the next day when she was shopping for some cheap delaine for the girl's school frocks, she paused to look at an elegant stella shawl heavily bordered with brilliant colors, that hung in a shop window, ticketed "Only $16."

I'll step in and see if that is the lowest he will take; there surely can be no harm in that, she thought, as she entered the store, and addressed the polite clerk, who came, pencil behind his ear, to attend to her wants

The lowest possible cent, ma'am, was his reply; it's the last of the lot, and so we let it go for sixteen dollars, though it's really worth twenty, if it's worth a cent; a real bargain, ma'am, I can tell you.

As Mary Rivers stood hesitating, another lady entered and asked to look at the same shawl.

Shall I send it ma'am? said the clerk, when it was safely enbalmed in a wrapping of brown paper.

No, I will take it myself, she said.

The truth was, she judged it best to carry it quietly home and say nothing to Henry, he might think it was extravagant, she said to herself, but I know it's necessary; men are no judges in such matters, and Henry is so unobservant that he will never know whether I am wearing a new shawl or an old one. I must economize strictly this month and get along without buying anything whatever; I can manage it somehow, I know.

And so the next Sunday, Mrs. Rivers had the pleasure of wearing to church her beautiful bonnet and exquisite shawl to match; but whether the transcient gratification compensated for the guilty pang she felt when the unconscious Henry complimented her dress and blooming appearance, is quite a doubtful question. Concealment—extravagance—almost deception—ah! had she not better worn the old maroon silk bonnet and the broach shawl to the end of time, than to open the gates of her clear, happy conscience, to such dark looking guests as these.

Mamma, mamma, said little Fanny, pulling at her mother's dress with the imperative confidence of an indulgent pet, a day or two afterwards, just see what a big hole there is in the side of my shoe. You promised me you would buy me some new ones to go to school in.

Don't annoy me, child! How often I have told you not to disturb people when they are busy, said Mary, fretfully; she was contriving how to get along to the end of the month without buying any more groceries.

But see, mamma, how it is torn, persisted Fanny, piteously.

I can't help that; what is the use of being so careless? I cannot buy you shoes until next month, so don't fret any longer.

It was a positive relief to Mrs. Rivers, when her little girls had gone to school. That shawl! why had she been so foolishly extravagant?

Mother, said Charles, will you give me half a dollar to buy a new slate?

Half a dollar, Charles? it seems to me that your school wants are perfectly endless! Where is the old slate?

I broke it by accident, yesterday; indeed, mother, I was not to blame.

O dear me, it does seem that my children are the most careless in the world. I haven't a cent to spare this month, you'll have to wait, Charlie.

But, mother, I shall get behind the class, if I have no slate to work out those hard algebra sums on.

Well, I cannot help it if you do; It will teach you to take better care next time.

She felt very guilty when Charlie shut the door; she was not in the habit of blaming her children for such accidents, but that unlucky shawl had left her no money and a scold was the best cloak for her vexation.

Scarcely had she recovered her usual serenity, when it was again disturbed by a knock at the door; this time it was a poor little German boy, whom she was accustomed frequently to employ in running errands, chopping wood, and such trifles. She knew his mother to be miserably poor, and often when they would else have gone supperless to-bed, she had given them gratuities and presents, little felt by her, but all important to the starving foreigners. Now, however, she was in no humor to listen to the calls of charity, and poor little Fritz had but half uttered his story of empty cupboard and fireless freezing hearth, before she interrupted him.

I have nothing for you, Fritz, to-day; go to work and earn something for yourself. I am tired of supporting a host of poor pensioners.

The repulsed boy, crept silently away, and once more Mrs. Rivers was left alone.

The afternoon closed in dark, tempestuous, and chilly, with drifts of snow careering along the streets, and a cold, bleak wind moaning past the door. The mother went to the window often to gaze down the street, she could not help thinking uneasily of little Fanny's ragged shoes.

It was a long walk from school, and when at length Fanny did come, her little feet were wet through, and the rent shoe was filled with melting snow. Mary said nothing as she took off the drenched stockings and chafed the small shivering feet, but her heart was full of uneasy fears.

They were realized. The child was in a high fever the next morning, moaning, tossing, and talking unconnectedly, and it seemed to Mary as if the cup of her own grief was full. Her husband's apprehension served to increase her own anguished fears.

O. Henry! do you think there is any danger? she sobbed.

How did you catch such a heavy cold? he asked, gravely, feeling her throbbing pulse.

It was when we came home from school, yesterday—it was snowing so hard and Fanny's shoes were all torn, prompty responded little Alice, who stood by.

Mr. Rivers took up one of the small shoes that lay by the bedside and examined it very closely.

How could you let her go from home yesterday with such shoes as these? he asked his wife, in a stern, reproachful tone.

Mary burst into a torrent of tears; her overstrained faculties could bear no more; and then by the bedside of her little fevered darling, she confided to her husband the story of her foolish extravagance. He listened to her in grave silence, and then handed her his purse without uttering a word.

I must go for the doctor now, he said.

When he was gone, and the child lay in a restless, uneasy sleep, Mary had time to review her follies. It seemed almost as if she had been under the influence of some baneful spell; she could hardly account for her own foolish conduct.

For a week the little one lay between life and death. For a long, sad week, Mary watched, trembling beside its bed, and then, thanks to a merciful Providence, it passed the crisis of danger, and once more the heavy weight was lifted from the mother's heart.

And so my little Fanny is really sitting up again, said Mr. Rivers, a few days after, as he came from his day's avocations.

Once more, thank Heaven, said Mary, her eyes swimming with happy tears, as she held the little thin hand in hers.

Oh! by the way, said Henry, as he laid aside his overcoat. I have been concealing a piece of sad intelligence from you until now. I knew it would grieve your kind heart, and you had quite enough to distress your mind without it.

What is it? said Mary, with a thrill of terror.

You remember the old German woman, whose little boy you used to employ about the house?

Yes.

She was frozen to death one of those cold nights, week before last, in her wretched garret down town. Poor little Fritz came to me, completely broken-hearted, and I could do no less than to see to the funeral, and take him into my office as errand boy. But good heavens, Mary, what is the matter! Are you ill?

She had turned deadly pale, and a sick feeling of horror came across her heart. Was the sore punishment of her folly not yet complete?

She told him all the history of her conduct, from her first step to the last; told it with humiliation and weeping, and bitter, bitter repentance, and then paused to hear his stern rebuke.

But did it come? he listened silently to it all, and then, putting his arm gently around her, said softly.

My poor little wife, you have indeed received an awful lesson, but it is one that will endure for a life time. We are all but the almoners of God's bounty, and all that is wasted in useless extravagance, goes aside from his treasury. The seeds have been sown in tears and pain, may they blossom into a glorious harvest in the hereafter. This one act of folly and its sad consequences are past now, and I think, dear wife, you will never have to blame yourself for such again.

Curiosities of the Spider.

Try to touch a spider from any point, and see if you can surprise him. Argus was not more vigilant. The eye of the insect is not moveable, as our eyes are, and were it constructed as ours are, it would not serve the insect efficiently. Hence its division into facets, conducting light from every direction. The spider has eight eyes, mounted upon different parts of his head; two in front, two in the top of the head, and two on each side.

The spider, unable to pursue his prey, by artifice ensnares it. The machinery by which it does this is wonderful; and the snare, or web, is exceedingly curious and delicate.

In the posterior part of the abdomen, are two small bags, where is secreted the fluid from which its web is spun, and the lips of which, perforated by minute orifices, silken threads of extreme fineness are ejected, which, at once, coalese into a fine glutinous thread on exposure to the air; and being attached to a wall or bush, they are woven into circular form, entangling unwary insects that serve the spider for food. Twenty-four of these fine threads, united, form one as large as that of the silk worm. The female deposits her eggs in bags of the same material of which the snare is made.

There are said to be three different kinds of material produced by the spider for her snare; one to form the meshes of the snare, and to make the gossamer threads by which she is conveyed through the air; one to mix with earth to form cells, and one to line these cells, as with fine cotton.

Some spiders hide under a silken hood or tube, six of their eyes projecting. Some bore a hole in the ground and line it as nicely as if it were done with trowel and mortar; they then hang it around with delicate curtains woven from materials prepared in their own bodies. The trap-door spider has a frame and hinges on the mouth of the cell, and is so provided that the claw of the spider can lay hold of it; and if she goes out or comes in, the door shuts.

All the spiders secrete a poisonous fluid, which they instil into their victims; but only some of the larger kinds are dangerous to man! especially those of the Mygale family, which cover, when at rest, a space of from six to seven inches in diameter, and the bite of which occasions a violent fever.

They sometimes seize and kill small birds; as the humming-bird and pigeon.

The gossamer threads which are seen glittering in the sunbeams, in autumn, are supposed to be the first unattached spinnings of some of the young of a species to which the Tarantula belongs.

Finding Fault with your Children.

It is at times necessary to censure and punish. But very much more may be done by encouraging children when they do well. Be therefore more careful to express your approbation of good conduct than your disapprobation of bad. Nothing can more discourage a child than a spirit of fault-finding on the part of its parent. And hardly anything can exert a more injurious influence upon the disposition of both parent and child. There are two great motives influencing human actions; hope and fear. Both of these are at times necessary. But who would not prefer to have her child influenced to good conduct by a desire of pleasing rather than by the fear of offending? If a mother never expresses her gratification when her children do well, and is always censuring them when she sees anything amiss, they are discouraged and unhappy. They feel that it is useless to try to please. Their dispositions become hardened and soured by this ceaseless fretting; and at last, finding that whether they do well or ill, they are equally found fault with, they relinquish all efforts to please, and become heedless of reproaches.

But let a mother approve of her child's conduct whenever she can. Let her show that his good behavior makes her sincerely happy. Let her reward him for his efforts to please, by smiles and affection. In this way she will cherish in her child's heart some of the noblest and most desirable feelings of our nature. She will cultivate in him an amiable disposition and a cheerful spirit. Your child has been through the day, very pleasing and obedient. Just before putting him to sleep for the night, you take his hand and say, "My son, you have been very good to-day. It makes me very happy to see you so kind and obedient. God loves children who are dutiful to their parents, and he promises to make them happy." This approbation from his mother, is, to him, a great reward. And when, with a more than ordinary affectionate tone, you say, "Good night, my dear son," he leaves the room with his little eyes full of feeling. And when he closes his eyes for sleep, he is happy, and resolves that he will always try to do his duty.—The Mother at Home.

Apples of Gold.

"A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver." Only a little word—not a long, earnest appeal; not a labored argument, but a word spoken wisely, with the right feeling, and at the right time. How often has a single word changed the whole tide of feeling and exposed with noontide clearness the true heart of its possessor. An unhappy disagreement occurred one day between two students, both professing Christians. Bitter words passed between them, and, when they separated, strong resentment was rankling in their breasts. A fellow-student who was present, felt deeply pained at the sad, humiliating scene and longed to see the parties reconciled. But words of expostulation and entreaty would hardly be listened to, and he was at a loss what course to pursue. The day wore on, and nightfall was approaching. With a troubled heart, he called at the room of one of his friends, and said very earnestly, and kindly, "Almost sundown!" and then walked away. But the words flashed like electric fire upon the turbulent waters of the student's soul. "Almost sundown!" and he had not yet forgiven his brother, nor asked forgiveness! Could he offer his evening prayer? Would the sacrifice on such an altar as his unforgiving heart be accepted? No, he must first go and be reconciled to his brother. And he did go, humbly and prayerfully, and both hearts were melted and subdued. When next they parted, it was with spirits bowed, but peaceful, and with the bonds of brotherly love between them once more strong and bright. Truly these two little words were "wrought into gold."

Advertising in Hard Times.

Suppose a merchant, with his store full of goods, find that he has got to submit to some sacrifice in order to meet his demands, what is the best thing he can do? The hypothesis is probable enough in these times, but the answers to the practical question will be various. They ought to be, because the method which will afford relief to one, is not advisable, or if so, not available, to another.

But still, as a general answer, what is better than this:—Cut down your prices, advertise vigorously, and sell off your goods?

In the first place, if a sacrifice is unavoidable, and the result be the same pecuniarily to the dealer, it is far better that the community in general should reap the benefit of it, than that it pass wholly to one or two brokers. Instead of an enormous per centage, in pursuance of a doubtful system, being thus thrown into the coffers of a few individuals, the cheapest necessaries of life would enter thousands of housholds, diffusing comfort every where. Thus the burdens which rest on the mercantile class, instead of being made tributary to the avarice of the moneyed class, would be turned to solid benefit of all the other classes.

Again, such a course would keep trade agoing. Tight as money is, not a cent has been annihilated—it exists all about us somewhere. A great deal of it, in separately small sums, must be exchanged for the numberless articles of food and raiment required. If prices hold up, this exchange will be as scanty and put off as long as possible. But let reduced prices be advertised, let it be understood that goods must be sold at all events, and the stores will be crowded under a little panic of the right kind—a dollar will be spent here, and five or ten there, resulting in hundreds or thousands to the enterprising dealers. Thus may hoarded specie be drawn from its hiding places. Thus the healthy circulation of money will be kept up, and the basis maintained for an easy renewal of prosperous times. Everything will grow better by degrees, while of him who recklessly sticks to old prices and wholly relies on borrowing, it may be said, the last end of that man is worse than the first.

Of course, to many individuals this method is not feasible. They cannot wait, or their stocks would be insufficient to realize their needs, or other good and indisputable reasons might be cited. But where it is impossible, we believe it to be advisable on every ground of personal and public expediency. If advertising is indispensable when customers are rushing to buy of their own accord, and only want to know where to go, it is doubly necessary in these times when the fact of cheapness is felt to be the all-important fact.

Devotion.

If we know that an individual holds communion with God, that fact tends to give us confidence in him. Something within tells us that the praying person is one who will not injure us, and one whom we can safely trust. It was upon this principle that an infidel who was traveling, and who was overtaken by night-fall in a lonely and dangerous place, confessed that he was relieved of his fears of being assissinated, when the owner of the cabin, where he had taken shelter, led the family in prayer before retiring to rest. The infidel slept soundly after such a manifestation of Christianity. A cabin roofed and walled by prayer could not be an unsafe place, he thought.

We have authority for another pleasing incident illustrating the same point. In exercising hospitality to a clergyman who arrived at a dwelling late in the evening, the heads of the house surrender to him their own chamber. Their little daughter three years of age was asleep in the crib, and they concluded not to disturb her. Quite early in the morning she awoke and looked toward the bed usually occupied by her parents, saw a stranger there. At first she was startled and covered her head with the counterpane. Soon, however, she peeped out and said:—

Man, do you pray to God?

Yes, was the answer, I love God, and pray to him every day.

This satisfied the little inquirer; she smiled, turned over, and dropped asleep.

Summer Sours.

Physiological research has fully established the fact that acids promote the separation of the bile from the blood, which is then passed to the system, thus preventing fevers, the prevailing disease of summer. All fevers are "bilious," that is, the bile is in the blood. Whatever is antagonistic of fever, is cooling. It is a common saying that fruits are "cooling," and also berries of every description; it is because the acidity which they contain aids in purifying the blood. Hence the great yearning for greens and lettuce and salads in the early spring, these being eaten with vinegar; hence also the taste for something sour, for lemonades, on an attack of fever.

But this being the case, it is easy to see, that we nullify the good effects of fruits and berries, in proportion as we eat them with sugar, or even sweet milk, or cream. If we eat them in their natural state, fresh, ripe, perfect, it is almost impossible to eat too many, or eat enough to hurt us, especially if we eat them alone, not taking any liquor with them whatever. Hence also is buttermilk or even common sour milk promotive of health in summer time. Sweet milk tends to biliousness in sedentary people, sour milk is antagonistic. The Greeks and Turks are passionately fond of sour milk. The shepherds use rennet, and the milk dealers alum to make it sour the sooner.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Romance of the Needle.

What a wonderful thing is this matter of sewing! It began in Paradise and was the earliest fruit of the fall. Amidst the odor of flowers, and by the side of meandering streams, and under the shade of the dark green foliage, the cowering forms of the guilty progenitors of our race bowed in anguish and shame, as they took their first lesson in the art which has ever since been the mark of servitude or sorrow. And yet the curse has not been without its blessings.—The needle with the thimble has done more for man than the compass. The needle-work of the Tabernacle is the most ancient record of the art. Early used to adorn the vestments of the priest, it was honored by God himself and became a type of beauty and of holiness. "The King's daughter is all glorious within; her clothing is of wrought gold; she shall be brought unto the king in raiment of needle work." The magnificence of kingly pomp, the imposing spectacles of religion or wealth, the tribute of honor to the great, the charm of dignified society, the refined attractions of beauty, are dependent upon the needle.

"BORN ... NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

THE UNIVERSALIST PIC NIC on Wednesday last, was, as usual, a grand affair. The day opened rather unpromising; a mantle of thick vapor obscured the heavens, but as the morning advanced, it was soon dissipated, and the sun broke forth in all its power and loveliness. Nine o'clock was the hour appointed for departure, but long before that time, our streets were made lively with eager pedestrians and others, wending their way to the Depot, to secure seats for a passage to the pleasant groves of Abington Nine cars were in attendance, and at half past nine o'clock, the whistle sounded, and the order, "All aboard," given, when the train shot from the building, mid strains of sweet music by the Quincy Band, and with as happy a company as ever congregated for a day of pleasure and amusement. Calls were made at intervening stations, to take up passengers; and ere they reached their journey's end, the cars were crammed to overflowing. Arrived upon the ground, the crowd soon dispersed to enjoy and revel in the attractions and beauties of the place. Boats were put in requition, to skim the smooth surface of the placid lake--dancing, under an arbor protected from the scorching rays of the sun, by a canopy of thick canvas, assisted by the martial strains of the band, attracted its admirers, while the woods were made jubilant by the merry voices of children, whose wild notes of happy freedom, blended sweetly with those of the native choristers. The festivities were kept up with spirit and energy, until late in the day, when the happy party embarked for their respective homes, which they reached at early twilight, without a single accident to cause regret or embitter the feelings.

A Reform Called For

The recent operations of burglars and incendiaries in this town, calls upon the inhabitants to take some measures for the better security of property; and the first steps seems to be the appointment of a night police, not only for the interests of merchants and the owners of buildings, but also for the keeping of better order than is at present observed about our streets during the evening. Many of the corners are nightly resorted to by the rowdy portion of the community, and it is, to say the least, very disagreeable for ladies or any civil person to pass within hearing of their vile conversation. Such things should not be allowed, and we hope to see proper measures taken for the prevention of them. Will some one suggest a way to bring about this, much to be desired object.

Medical Controversies in Public.

MR. EDITOR: Would "Pro Aris" read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest, some of the many good stories told by Benjamin Franklin: that of the "Eagle and the Cat," or "Grinding the axe," for instance, he might obtain some insight into the reason why "old birds are not caught with chaff."

Surely, he holds the laboring oar for the work he has undertaken to perform; and if he feels weary doing well enough, he ought not to solicit that assistance of others which should come from himself within. That he may successfully work out his own safe deliverance, however, Observer would suggest to him, that he will find, as others have found, great satisfaction in a patient system of induction and deduction. Would he try it, and should he find John Wesley's favorite word—tried—to fail him, after long continued perseverance and endurance in suffering, then Observer, may obligingly divulge to him, not only the "important item" wanting, with enlarged views of correct principles for the preservation of health to the natural end, of a natural begining, but of the most appropriate method of curing or removing disease.

With "all about" Columbus, and the flat or round world, the matter has as little application to the subject, as does the song,

"In good old Colony times,
When we served under the king,
Three roguesh chaps fell into mishaps,
Because they could not sing."

But, every thing must have an end; and in closing, "Observer" would remark, concerning the remarkable cures of all forms of disease, without a particle of medicine, that both general and medical history abounds with examples of the wonderworking power of faith and credulity, both in the cures of charlatanry and the mere visit of a physician, of eminence and great reputation. Nevertheless, common modesty, common caution, and common prudence, would seem to dictate to us all without bringing on Scripture for it, "to prove all things, and hold fast to that which is good."

"Let us then be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait."

National Monument at Plymouth; brief observation; interesting Items. — Gleason's Pictorial.—The Celebration on Tuesday; Great times.—Dulness of Business—Boston Book Trade Sale—Financial matters—Depression in Real Estate.

The chief topic of the week, has been the Plymouth Monument Celebration. You will recollect that the "Forefather's Rock," or what remains of it, is imbedded in the earth, at the head of the wharf lately bought of Andrew L. Russell, Esq., at a very liberal price; the old buildings have been removed, and the foundation prepared for the corner stone. A canopy is to be placed over the Rock as a shelter and protection, near the water's side, over the spot originally occupied by the Rock at the time of the landing of the passengers of the Mayflower, on the twenty-first of December, 1620. The materials of which it is to be built is Quincy Granite, furnished by Messrs. Frederick & Sargent, of your town; who will complete it in December next, if the money can be raised by contribution. The National Monument is to be built on a lofty hill near the village, in a most commanding position. To be entirely of granite, with the exceptions of the panels and alto reliefs. The middle portion of the structure, is an octagonal pedestal, eighty-three feet high, upon which is to stand a commanding female figure, representing Faith, rising to the height of seventy feet above the platform of the pedestal, (a pretty tall image, truly;) so that the whole Monument will rise one hundred and fifty three feet above the ground. Faith stands upon a rock, holding in her left hand an open Bible—with the other hand pointing towards Heaven. Other large images are to be placed from the main pedestal wings, emblamatic of Law, Morality, Education and Freedom; besides various devices and figures on the panels of the Monument. All of these panels are to be porphyry, serpentine or other hard stone. In the main pedestal is to be a chamber twenty-four feet in diameter. The pedestal is eighty feet at the base, and sitting figures upon the wings, are forty feet in their position. Even the figures in the panels are to be eighteen feet in height. The Monument when completed, will be unlike all others in the world in its purpose, and will far exceed all others, at least of modern times, in the grandeur of the scale upon which it is to be executed. This great project originated with the Pilgrim Society. The architect, is Hammatt Billings, Esq., of Boston, who, by these designs, has shown himself a genius of the first magnitude. This portion of the hill was given for the erection of the Monument, by Mr. Hathaway, of Plymouth. The corner-stone was presented by your respected townsman, Eleazer Frederick, Esq. I have endeavored to give you the outlines, in description of this wonderful Monument to the Pilgrims, and would express my obligations in particular, for much valuable information on the subject, to F. Gleason, Esq., in his last Pictorial, which embraces a fine drawing of this stately pile, and the best description of the Monument I have seen. It probably will be some years before it is finished. Much of the money is yet to be raised by subscription; one hundred and fifty thousand dollars at least, will be required for its completion. The concourse to Plymouth on Tuesday, was immense; the ceremonies on a grand and pleasing scale, and so far as I can learn, every thing passed off pleasantly.

Business has been awfully dull in Boston this week. A large number of our business men are rusticating in the country. The only redeeming feature in trade was the Great Book Sales, which are now in successful progress. The catalogue of these sales, embrace an octavo volume of four hundred pages. Every lot is sold by sample, and none but booksellers are allowed to bid or become purchasers at the sale. Booksellers are in from all parts of the United States.

The peace news from Europe give a new current to financial matters. There is this week but a moderate demand for money. Good stocks keep up, and extensive orders which are anticipated would advance prices materially. Sales of real estate in and around Boston, are often perpetrated at disastrous prices for the sellers.

Twelve at noon--I am off for New Hampshire and Vermont—from hence you may hear of me next week.

A NEW MEDICINE. "WOOD'S MEDICINA." This preparation is composed principally of imported barks, gums and roots, and is put up strictly according to the Recipe of a skilful New England physician, who has used the same with eminent success in his own extensive practice. It is an excellent remedy for bilious or liver complaints, jaundice, headache, diarrhœa, stagnation of the blood, and all complaints arising from INDIGESTION. It is adapted to all classes, especially to those of sedentary habits. Its unrivalled efficacy as a family medicine has induced the lawful holder of the Recipe, by the solicitation of numerous friends, to offer it to the public Prepared and sold by Mrs. H. M. Woods, on Cottage Avenue.

For the Patriot,

Bootmakers' Strike.

MR. EDITOR:—When I wrote my last communication, it was not for the purpose of entering into a controversy with W., but to correct some of the many misrepresentations which have been industriously circulated through the town, to create a prejudice against the Bootmakers' Society. I corrected several in W.'s article of July 16th. In W.'s last communication he tacitly admits that he was wrong in some of his statements, and confines himself to reiterating two of them.

Perhaps he may not be able to comprehend what constitutes an agreement, or, perhaps he may not be willing to admit it, (for of ccurse he wants some excuse,) but if any working man in town wishes to convince himself on the matter, I will produce the agreements, and he can be satisfied.

W. denies that he was in favor of a special meeting on the question of American members. I know full well that W. would not write the requisition. He sent the man to the President to do it; but W. knows the reason he assigned for not doing so, and he knows, also, that he stated he would support the requisition, if a meeting was called. W. evades the question; he does not state positively that he was against the adoption of the rule, though his language bears that meaning, because he knows well that every member of the Society knows that to say so would be a falsehood.

I can see no difference between the letter in the Boston Herald and the article in the Patriot; perhaps W. can—we hear of persons who can swallow a camel, and strain at a gnat.

In justice to W., I must state that I have heard from the best authority, that when W. left town he was getting full wages on the kind of work he was making; the same wages is now paid for the poorest kind of work made in town. In justice to myself, I must say that I have heard it stated in presence of W., and not denied by him, that he did work for one-third less than the present wages. It is news to me to hear of W.'s losing so much time and money on account of the Society—some may think it is the other way, but no matter.

W. opens some new issues but I cannot follow him any further. I owe an apology to my shopmates for entering so far into a controversy with a person in his position, if he was a true man he had ample opportunity to show himself one; if he is a true man he can still retrieve his error; but, if he is a traitor to his manhood, and a deserter from his craft, he can keep along in his present course—the Boss will like him.

W. knows well that I have no personal malice against him. When he was in a difficult and doubtful position, before now, I stood by him, in the face of very peculiar circumstances, doubtless remembered by your readers.

W. says that some of the members feel ashamed of their President. No doubt the "Brigade" are not at all satisfied with him, neither is the "Sergeant." Does W. think the members of the Society are proud of their Vice President?

W. is fond of poetry, and I will close my share of this controversy with a quotation:

"Oh for a tongue to curse the slave,
Whose treason like a deadly blight,
Comes o'er the councils of the brave,
And blasts them in their hour of might."

He knows the passage, and can finish the stanza and make the application.

To the working men of the town, I would say one word before I close. Do not let the sneers, the jibes, and the calumnies, circulated against us by interested parties, to operate any longer to our prejudice. Consider that every man who lives by labor is directly interested in this cause. If we can be crushed by a combination of capital, aided by traitors in our own ranks, to-day; your turn may come to-morrow, and your Bosses will point to the Bootmakers as a triumphant example of success. Judge us by our own acts, not by the statements of those who oppose us. If we cannot keep a trade society, governed by trade principles, can any other class of men do so? Examine the principle on which our Society is founded, and if our principles are true, and our actions as men in support of those principles, honest and fearless, we consider ourselves entitled to the moral influence of our class, no matter on what a man labors, or for whom he works. Remember that we seek for, nor allow no distinction of nationality, religion, or politics among us; it is those who oppose the Society, and whose interest is in breaking it down, that try to "divide and conquer"

ALTERATION OF TIME. The Democratic Convention which was announced to be held on the 7th of September, has been changed to the 15th; per order of the State Committee. See their notice in another column.

SARZA. We have long supposed this celebrated drug, had come to be an exploded humbug, but we are assured by those skilled in the healing art, that not the Sarsaparilla itself is to be blamed for this conclusion, but the miserable, worthless preparations of it, that have been palmed off upon the community—preparations which contain about as much of its virtues as they do of gold dust. It is a commercial fact that almost all of the Sarsaparilla gathered in the world, is consumed in the old countries of Europe, where the science of medicine, has reached its highest perfection, and where they know the best what to employ for the mastery of disease. Hence, we are glad to find that we are now to have a compound of this excellent alterative, which can be relied on, and our community will not need be assured, that any thing DOCTOR AYER makes, is worthy of their confidence. He has been for years engaged in eliminating this remedy (see advertisement) designing to make it his chef d' ouvre which should add the crowning glory to his already enviable reputation.—American Cell, New York.

Sister, now in heaven thou dwellest,
A pure angel near God's throne;
Joys immortal, lasting pleasures,
Evermore shall be thine own.

Warmer love than friends could give thee—
While on earth thou dwelt in pain—
Now is thine through endless ages,
Pure and constant, still the same.

Calmly now thy form is resting,
Where the summer flow'rs bloom fair,
And the birds oft sing their matins
O'er the loved one sleeping there.

Sister oft when stars are shining,
Thy pure spirit looks on me;
When the silver moon is beaming,
Oft methinks thy form I see.

Sister, thy white hands are reaching
To enclasp the loved of earth;
Keep thy spirit ceaseless vigils,
Till they taste the heavenly birth;

Till they meet at heaven's portals,
Gain with thee the blis-ful shore—
Dwell forever with immortals;
Sister, then we'll part no more.

Scrofula, or King's Evil,

is a constitutional disease, a corruption of the blood, by which this fluid becomes vitiated, weak, and poor. Being in the circulation, it pervades the whole body, and may burst out in disease on any part of it. No organ is free from its attacks, nor is there one which it may not destroy. The scrofulous taint is variously caused by mercurial disease, low living, disordered or unhealthy food, impure air, filth and filthy habits, the depressing vices, and, above all, by the venereal infection. Whatever be its origin, it is hereditary in the constitution, descending "from parents to children unto the third and fourth generation;" indeed, it seems to be the rod of Him who says, "I will visit the iniquities of the fathers upon their children."

Its effects commence by deposition from the blood of corrupt or ulcerous matter, which, in the lungs, liver, and internal organs, is termed tubercles; in the glands, swellings; and on the surface, eruptions or sores. This foul corruption, which genders in the blood, depresses the energies of life, so that scrofulous constitutions not only suffer from scrofulous complaints, but they have far less power to withstand the attacks of other diseases; consequently, vast numbers perish by disorders which, although not scrofulous in their nature, are still rendered fatal by this taint in the system. Most of the consumption which decimates the human family has its origin directly in this scrofulous contamination; and many destructive diseases of the liver, kidneys, brain, and, indeed, of all the organs, arise from or are aggravated by the same cause.

One quarter of all our people are scrofulous; their persons are invaded by this lurking infection, and their health is undermined by it. To cleanse it from the system we must renovate the blood by an alterative medicine, and invigorate it by healthy food and exercise. Such a medicine we supply in

AYER'S

Compound Extract of Sarsaparilla,

the most effectual remedy which the medical skill of our times can devise for this every where prevailing and fatal malady. It is combined from the most active remedials that have been discovered for the expurgation of this foul disorder from the blood, and the rescue of the system from its destructive consequences. Hence it should be employed for the cure of not only scrofula, but also those other affections which arise from it, such as ERUPTIVE and SKIN DISEASES, ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, ROSE, or ERYSIPELAS, PIMPLES, PUSTULES, BLOTCHES, BLAINS and BOILS, TUMORS, TETTER and SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, RINGWORM, RHEUMATISM, SYPHILITIC and MERCURIAL DISEASES, DROPSY, DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, and, indeed, ALL COMPLAINTS ARISING FROM VITIATED OR IMPURE BLOOD. The popular belief in "impurity of the blood" is founded in truth, for scrofula is a degeneration of the blood. The particular purpose and virtue of this Sarsaparilla is to purify and regenerate this vital fluid, without which sound health is impossible in contaminated constitutions.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR ALL THE PURPOSES OF A FAMILY PHYSIC,

are so composed that disease within the range of their action can rarely withstand or evade them. Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Hoarseness, Croup, Bronchitis, Incipient Consumption, and for the relief of Consumptive Patients in advanced stages of the disease.

So wide is the field of its usefulness and so numerous are the cases of its cures, that almost every section of country abounds in persons publicly known, who have been restored from alarming and even desperate diseases of the lungs by its use. When once tried, its superiority over every other medicine of its kind is too apparent to escape observation, and where its virtues are known, the public no longer hesitate what antidote to employ for the distressing and dangerous affections of the pulmonary organs that are incident to our climate. While many inferior remedies thrust upon the community have failed and been discarded, this has gained friends by every trial, conferred benefits on the afflicted they can never forget, and produced cures too numerous and too remarkable to be forgotten.

is a constitutional disease, a corruption of the blood, by which this fluid becomes vitiated, weak, and poor. Being in the circulation, it pervades the whole body, and may burst out in disease on any part of it. No organ is free from its attacks, nor is there one which it may not destroy. The scrofulous taint is variously caused by mercurial disease, low living, disordered or unhealthy food, impure air, filth and filthy habits, the depressing vices, and, above all, by the venereal infection. Whatever be its origin, it is hereditary in the constitution, descending "from parents to children unto the third and fourth generation;" indeed, it seems to be the rod of Him who says, "I will visit the iniquities of the fathers upon their children."

Its effects commence by deposition from the blood of corrupt or ulcerous matter, which, in the lungs, liver, and internal organs, is termed tubercles; in the glands, swellings; and on the surface, eruptions or sores. This foul corruption, which genders in the blood, depresses the energies of life, so that scrofulous constitutions not only suffer from scrofulous complaints, but they have far less power to withstand the attacks of other diseases; consequently, vast numbers perish by disorders which, although not scrofulous in their nature, are still rendered fatal by this taint in the system. Most of the consumption which decimates the human family has its origin directly in this scrofulous contamination; and many destructive diseases of the liver, kidneys, brain, and, indeed, of all the organs, arise from or are aggravated by the same cause.

One quarter of all our people are scrofulous; their persons are invaded by this lurking infection, and their health is undermined by it. To cleanse it from the system we must renovate the blood by an alterative medicine, and invigorate it by healthy food and exercise. Such a medicine we supply in the most effectual remedy which the medical skill of our times can devise for this every where prevailing and fatal malady. It is combined from the most active remedials that have been discovered for the expurgation of this foul disorder from the blood, and the rescue of the system from its destructive consequences. Hence it should be employed for the cure of not only scrofula, but also those other affections which arise from it, such as ERUPTIVE and SKIN DISEASES, ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, ROSE, or ERYSIPELAS, PIMPLES, PUSTULES, BLOTCHES, BLAINS and BOILS, TUMORS, TETTER and SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, RINGWORM, RHEUMATISM, SYPHILITIC and MERCURIAL DISEASES, DROPSY, DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, and, indeed, ALL COMPLAINTS ARISING FROM VITIATED OR IMPURE BLOOD. The popular belief in "impurity of the blood" is founded in truth, for scrofula is a degeneration of the blood. The particular purpose and virtue of this Sarsaparilla is to purify and regenerate this vital fluid, without which sound health is impossible in contaminated constitutions.

Compound Extract of Sarsaparilla,

Poetry.

Blackberries.

Black as Beauty's tresses,
Sweet as Love's caresses,
Darlings of the people, beloved of high and low,
Dear to age and childhood,
Gleaming in the wild wood,
Peeping to the sunshine in every green hedge-row,
Berries of the bramble,
How I love to ramble
Through the shady valleys, and pluck you as I go!

Your luxuriant treasure,
Stintless, out of measure,
Fills me with such feeling of recklessness and joy;
With such sense of rapture
At the wealth of capture,
Prodigal as sunbeams where the wavelets toy,
I laugh at Time and trial,
And on his sunny dial
Turn back the creeping shadows and feel I'm yet a boy.

Come hither, little maiden,
With wicker basket laden;
And thou, oh peasant urchin, with cheeks like dawning day;
We'll all go forth together,
Free as the wind and weather,
And pluck the luscious blackberries that ripen by the way;
You of the world unweeting,
I from the world retreating,
To taste a simple pleasure, and prize it while I may!

A Parody.

In season when our funds are low,
Subscribers are provoking slow,
A few supplies keep up the flow
Of dunes departing rapidly.

But we shall see a sadder sight
When duns pour in from morn to night,
Commanding every sixpence bright
To be forked over speedily.

Our bonds and due-bills are arrayed,
Each seal and signature displayed;
The holders vow they must be paid,
With threats of "Law and Chancery."

Then to despair we're almost driven—
There's precious little use of livin',
When our last copper 's rudely riven
From hands that held it lovingly.

But larger yet those dues shall grow,
When interest 's added on below,
Length'ning our chin a foot or so,
When gazing at them hopelessly.

'Tis so, that scarce have we begun
To plead for time upon a dun,
Before there comes another one,
Demanding pay ferociously.

The prospect darkens—on ye brave
Who would our very beacon save:
Waive, patrons, all your pretexts waive,
And pay the printer cheerfully.

Ah! it would yield us pleasure sweet,
A few delinquents now to meet,
Asking of us a clear receipt
For papers taken reg'larly.

Up the Hill a Berrying.

On a sunny summer morning,
Early as the dew was dry,
Up the hill I went a berrying;
Need I tell you—tell you why?
Farmer Davis had a daughter,
And it happened that I knew,
On each sunny morning, Jenny
Up the hill went berrying too.

Lonely work is picking berries,
So I joined her on the hill;
Jenny, dear, said I, your basket's
Quite too large for one to fill.
So we staid—we two—to fill it,
Jenny talking—I was still—
Leading where the hill was steep,
Picking berries up the hill.

This is up-hill work, said Jenny,
So is life, said I; shall we
Climb it each alone, or, Jenny,
Will you come and climb with me?
Redder than the blushing berries
Jenny's cheek a moment grew,
While, without delay, she answered:
I will come and climb with you.

Anecdotes.

Somebody speaking of a lecture on amusement, delivered one evening, asked "Jim" how many there were out. Jim looked solemn, and promptly replied—

Five hundred and seventy five.

What! so many as that on a stormy night? was the quick response.

Yes, mildly responded Jim, full that number; the hall will hold just six hundred and as there were only twenty-five in it, there must have been five hundred and seventy-five out.

Charlie, my dear, said a loving mother to her hopeful son, just budding into breeches, Charlie, my dear, come here and get some candy.

I guess I won't mind it now, mother, replied Charles; I've got in some tobacco.

So I see you have put on your best suit for dinner.

Oh, yes; I expected the dinner to be well dressed for me, so I thought I could not do less than return the compliment.

An indiscreet man confided a secret to another and begged him not to repeat it.

It's all right, was the reply, I will be as close as you were.

Father, have you seen anything of my bonnet? I must have left it in this room.

No, my dear, I have not; but I will take the microscope and look for it.

Are these pure canaries? asked a gentleman of a bird-dealer, with whom he was negotiating for a "gift for his fair."

Yes, sir, said the dealer, confidentially, I raised them 'ere birds from canary seed.

Is he a Christian?

Is he a Christian?

The question reached my ear as I sat conversing with a friend, and I paused in the sentence I was uttering to note the answer.

Oh, yes; he is a Christian, was replied.

I am rejoiced to hear you say so. I was not aware of it before, said the other.

Yes; he has passed from death unto life. Last week, in the joy of his new birth, he united himself to the church, and is now in fellowship with saints.

What a blessed change!

Blessed, indeed. Another soul saved: another added to the great company of those who have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. There is joy in Heaven on his account.

Of whom are they speaking? I asked, turning to my friend.

Of Fletcher Grey, I believe, was replied.

Few men stood more in need of Christian graces, said I. If he is, indeed, numbered with the saints, there is cause for rejoicing.

By their fruits ye shall know them, responded my friend. I will believe his claim to the title of Christian, when I see the fruit in good living. If he have truly passed from death unto life, as they say, he will work the work of righteousness. A sweet fountain will not send forth bitter waters.

My friend but expressed my own sentiments in this, and all like cases. I have learned to put small trust in profession; to look past the Sunday and prayer-meeting piety of people, and to estimate religious quality by the standard of the Apostle James. There must be genuine love of the neighbor, before there can be a love of God; for neighborly love is the ground in which that higher and purer love takes root. It is all in vain to talk of love as a mere ideal thing. Love is an active principle, and, according to its quality, works. If the love be heavenly, it will show itself in good deeds to the neighbor; but, if infernal, in acts of selfishness that disregard the neighbor.

I will observe this, Mr. Gray, said I, as I walked homeward with the company, and see whether the report touching him be true. If he is, indeed, a Christian, as they affirm, the Christian graces of meekness and charity will blossom in his life, and make all the air around him fragrant.

Opportunity soon came. Fletcher Gray was a storekeeper, and his life in the world was, consequently, open to the observation of all men. He was likewise a husband and father. His relations were, therefore, of a character to give, daily, a test of his true quality.

It was only the day after, that I happened to meet Mr. Gray under circumstances favorable to observation. He came into the store of a merchant with whom I was transacting some business, and asked the price of certain goods in the market. I moved aside and watched him narrowly. There was a marked change in the expression of his countenance and in the tones of his voice. The former had a sober, almost solemn expression the latter was subdued, even to plaintiveness. But, in a little while, these peculiarities disappeared, and the aforetime Mr. Gray stood there unchanged; unchanged, not only in appearance, but in character. There was nothing of the yea, yea, and nay, nay, spirit in his bargain-making, but an eager, wordy effort to gain an advantage in trade. I noticed that, in the face of an asseveration that only five per cent. over cost was asked for a certain article, he still endeavored to procure it at a lower figure than was named by the seller, and finally crowded him down to the exact cost, knowing as he did, that the merchant had a large stock on hand, and could not well afford to hold it over.

He's a sharper! said the merchant, turning towards me as Gray left the store.

He's a Christian they say, was my quiet remark.

A Christian!

Yes; don't you know that he's become religious, and joined the church.

You're joking!

Not a word of it. Didn't you observe his subdued, meek aspect, when he came in?

Why, yes; now that you refer to it, I do remember a certain peculiarity about him. Become pious! Joined the church! Well, I'm sorry.

For what?

Sorry for the injury he will do to a good cause. The religion that makes a man a better husband, father, man of business, lawyer, doctor, or preacher, I reverence, for it is genuine, as the lives of those who accept it do testify. But your hypocritical pretenders I scorn and execrate.

It is, perhaps, almost too strong language, this, as applied to Mr. Gray, said I.

What is a hypocrite? asked the merchant.

A man who puts on the semblance of Christian virtues which he does not possess.

And that is what Mr. Gray does when he assumes to be religious. A true Christian is just. Was he just to me when he crowded me down in the price of my goods, and robbed me of a living profit, in order that he might secure a double gain? I think not. There is not even the live and let live principle in that. No, no, sir; If he has joined the church, my word for it, there is a black sheep in the fold; or, I might say, without abuse of language, a wolf therein, disguised in sheep's clothing.

Give the man time, said I. Old habits of life are strong, you know. In a little while I trust that he will see clearer, and regulate his actions from perceptions of higher truths.

I thought his heart was changed, answered the merchant, with some irony in his tones; "That he had been made a new creature."

I did not care to discuss that point with him, and so merely answered:

The beginnings of spiritual life are as the beginnings of natural life. The babe is born in feebleness, and we must wait through the periods of infancy, childhood and youth, before we can have the strong man ready for the burden and heat of the day, or full-armed for the battle. If Mr. Gray is in the first effort to lead a Christian life, that is something. He will grow wiser and better in time, I hope.

There is vast room for improvement, said the merchant. In my eyes, he is, at this time, only a hypocritical pretender. I hope, for the sake of the world and the church both, that his new associates will make something better out of him.

I went away, pretty much of the merchant's opinion. My next meeting with Mr. Gray was in the shop of a mechanic to whom he had sold a bill of goods some months previously. He had called to collect a portion of the amount which remained unpaid. The mechanic was not ready for him.

I am sorry, Mr. Gray, he began, with some hesitation of manner.

Sorry for what! sharply interrupted Mr. Gray.

Sorry that I have not the money to settle your bill. I have been disappointed ——

I don't want that old story. You promised to be ready for me to-day, didn't you? And Mr. Gray knit his brows, and looked angry and imperative.

Yes, I promised. But ——

Then keep your promise. No man has a right to break his word. Promises are sacred things, and should be kept religiously.

If my customers had kept their promises to me, there would have been no failure in mine to you, answered the poor mechanic.

It is of no use to plead other men's failings in justification of your own. You said the bill should be settled to-day, and I calculated upon it. Now, of all things in the world, I hate trifling. I shall not call again, sir!

If you were to call forty times, and I hadn't the money to settle your account, you would call in vain, said the mechanic, showing considerable disturbance of mind.

You needn't add insult to wrong. Mr. Gray's countenance reddened, and he looked angry.

If there is insult in the case, it is on your part, not mine, retorted the mechanic, with more feeling. I am not a digger of gold out of the earth, nor a coiner of money. I must be paid for my work before I can pay the bills I owe. It was not enough that I told you of the failure of my customers to meet their engagements ——

You've no business to have such customers, broke in Mr. Gray. No right to take my goods and sell them to men who are not honest enough to pay their bills.

One of them is your own son, replied the mechanic, goaded beyond endurance. His bill is equal to half of yours. I have sent for the amount a great many times, but still he puts me off with excuses. I will send it to you next time.

This was thrusting home with a sharp sword, and the vanquished Mr. Gray retreated from the battle field, bearing a painful wound.

That wasn't right in me, I know, said the mechanic, as Gray left his shop. I'm sorry, now, that I said it. But he pressed me too closely. I am but human.

He is a hard, exacting, money-loving man, was my remark.

They tell me he has become a Christian, said the mechanic. Has got religion—been converted. Is that so?

It is commonly reported; but I think common report must be in error. St. Paul gives patience, forbearance, long-suffering, meekness, brotherly kindness, and charity as some of the Christian graces. I do not see them in this man. Therefore, common report must be in error.

I have paid him a good many hundreds of dollars since I opened my shop here, said the mechanic, with the manner of one who felt hurt. If I am a poor, hard-working man, I try to be honest. Sometimes I get a little behind hand, as I am now, because people I work for don't pay up as they should. It happened twice before when I wasn't just square with Mr. Gray, and he pressed down very hard upon me, and talked just as you heard him to day. He got his money every dollar of it; and he will get his money now. I did think, knowing that he had joined the church and made a profession of religion, that he would bear a little patiently with me this time. That, as he had obtained forgiveness, as alleged, of his sins towards Heaven, he would be merciful to his fellow man. Ah! well! These things make us very skeptical about the honesty of men who call themselves religious. My experience with professors' has not been very encouraging. As a general thing, I find them quite as greedy for gain as other men. We outside people of the world get to be very sharp-sighted. When a man sets himself up to be of better quality than we, and calls himself by a name significant of heavenly virtue, we judge him, materially, by his own standard, and watch him very closely. If he remain as hard, as selfish, as exacting, and as eager after money as before, we do not put much faith in his profession, and are very apt to class him with hypocrites. His praying, and fine talk about faith and heavenly love, and being washed from all sin, excite in us contempt rather than respect. We ask for good works, and are never satisfied with anything else. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

On next Sunday I saw Mr. Gray in church. My eyes were on him when he entered. I noticed that all the lines of his face were drawn down, and that the whole aspect and bearing of the man were solemn and devotional. He moved to his place with a slow step, his eyes cast to the floor. On taking his seat, he leaned his head on the pew in front of him, and continued nearly a minute in prayer, during the services I heard his voice in the singing; and through the sermon, he maintained the most fixed attention. It was communion Sabbath; and he remained, after the congregation was dismissed, to join in the holiest act of worship.

Can this man be indeed self-deceived? I asked myself, as I walked homeward. Can he realy believe that Heaven is to be gained by pious acts alone? That every Sabbath evening he can pitch his tent a day's march nearer Heaven, though all the week he has failed in the commonest offices of neighborly love?

It so happened, that I had many opportunities for observing Mr. Gray, who, after joining the church, became an active worker in some of the public and prominent charities of the day. He contributed liberally in many cases, and gave a good deal of time to the prosecution of benevolent enterprises, in which men of some position were concerned. But, when I saw him dispute with a poor gardener who had laid the sods in the yard, about fifty cents, take sixpence off of a weary strawberry woman, or chaffer with his bootblack over an extra shilling, I could not think that it was genuine love for his fellow men that prompted his ostentatious charities.

In no instance did I find any better estimation of him in business circles; for his religion did not chasten the ardor of his selfish love of advantage in trade; nor make him more generous, nor more inclined to help or befriend the weak and the needy. Twice I saw his action in the case of the unhappy debtors, who had not been successful in business. In each case, his claim was among the smallest, but he said more unkind things, and was the hardest to satisfy, of any man among the creditors. He assumed dishonest intention at the outset, and made that a plea for the most rigid exaction; covering his own hard selfishness with offensive cant about mercantile honor, Christian integrity, and a religious observance of business contracts. He was the only man among all the creditors, who made his church-membership a prominent thing—few of them were even church-goers, and the only man who did not readily make concessions to the poor, down trodden debtors.

Is he a Christian? I asked, as I walked home in some depression of spirits from the last of these meetings. And I could but answer no—for to be a Christian, is to be Christ-like.

"As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them." This is the divine standard. "Ye must be born again," leaves to us no latitude of interpretation. There must be a death of the old, natural, selfish loves, and a new birth of spiritual affections. As a man feels, so will he act. If the affections that rule his heart be divine affections, he will be a lover of others and a seeker of their good. He will not be a hard, harsh, exacting man in natural things, but kind, forbearing, thoughtful of others, and in all his dealings with men, his actions will be governed by the heavenly laws of justice and judgment.

He will regard the good of his neighbor equally with his own. It is in the world where Christian graces reveal themselves, if they exist at all. Religion is not a mere Sunday affair, but the regulator of a man's conduct among his fellow men. Unless it does this, it is a false religion, and he who depends upon it for the enjoyment of heavenly felicities in the next life, will find himself in miserable error. Heaven cannot be earned by mere acts of piety, for Heaven is the complement of all divine affections in the human soul; and a man must come into these—must be born into them—while on earth, or he can never find an eternal home among the angels of God. Heaven is not gained by doing, but by living.

Mount Vernon.

Remarks of REV. CHARLES BROOKS, of Medford, before the Massachusetts Historical Society, July 14, 1859.

MR. PRESIDENT: A recent visit to Mount Vernon has revived some historical ideas, to which I ask a few moments attention. I tried to look from the angle of history, and therefore as I walked those fields, I meditated upon the historical associations hereafter to be connected with the sacred spot. I propose the topic merely as a subject for contemplation, hoping that its historical aspects may lead some one of my associates to suggest the appropriate course, which the oldest historical society in the United States may be expected to point out, in aid of those noble women who have purchased the priceless domain. I would briefly answer two questions, with reference only to a single point:

FIRST: What is Mount Vernon to become?

SECOND: How can it be made to express properly the ideas which should henceforth be associated with it?

First: What is Mount Vernon to become? It is to become emphatically historical; I hope exclusively historical, commemorating only the persons and events connected with the American Revolution. We cannot separate the Revolution and Washington, nor Washington and Mount Vernon. That spot will come to be regarded as the first volume of American Republican history, seen and read of all men. They who move the world have induced our country to set it apart as a monument of gratitude, in which every male or female within our borders is to feel a new, peculiar, and personal interest; and it will certainly thus become to future generations an historical record more precious and renovated than we at this time have power to conceive. I hope, therefore, that the Presidents of the Historical Societies of the several States in the Union may make a part of that Executive Committee who are to restore the beautiful spot to the form it had in 1799, and do all else that impartial history can sanction. One of our own body, I trust, will be Chairman of that Committee.

Mount Vernon, in its integrity, will be permanent. It cannot change its owners, or lose its new distinctive character. The present National capitol may pass away, but Mount Vernon cannot pass away; it is the only place of which such historic perpetuity can be predicated, E pluribus unum.

Second: If it be thus lasting and unchangeable, the next question is, how can it be made to express most fully and forcibly the veneration and love we cherish for Washington; and also, to embody those National ideas which we wish should forever be associated with it?

While the present precious mansion-house stands, it will, next to the sarcophagus, be regarded as the most endearing and expressive record; but, two hundred years are about the longest time that a common wooden building can stand in our climate. Half of that period has done its work of demolition on the noble structure. After the next century has finished its destruction there will only remain the ashes of the Chief to hallow the spot. Some may think best to rebuild the present house, using every sound timber and board, brick and stone, iron and glass, and replacing each in the exact position it now occupies, thus making the whole wear the same appearance as now. Would it not be better to repair the present house so thoroughly as to make it as strong as new? This would be doing as they have done with the Parthenon and Coliseum, the Temple of Peace and the Pantheon; or as we do our good old manuscripts and portraits, with Governor Carver's chair and the Pilgrim cradle.

But, after decay has brought all perishable monuments to the dust, what will then be needed, on the principle of the association of ideas? I answer, The one hundred millions of free Americans will then wish to see the perfect visible likeness of the living forms of those wise men who sat with Washington in public council, of those brave warriors who fought at his side in the open field. How grateful will it be to their eyes to look upon the true and expressive features of those orators and statesmen, heroes and patriots, whose presence at Mount Vernon would shed new glory on their Leader, while it would make that spot the Pantheon of the Republic. Such an assemblage would not only help to create, but to perpetuate a National gratitude and a fraternal union. Mount Vernon would thus become a heart, whose strong and steady pulsations would send its life to every extremity of the body politic. What outward record half so impressive or half so durable as the perfect likeness in marble of those patriotic statesmen, who declared to the world that we ought to be free and independent, and of those brave warriors who afterwards made us so?

Three historical epochs, or events, seem to group themselves at the tomb of Washington: 1—The Declaration of Independence; 2—The Eight Years struggle to secure it; and 3—The beginning of a new nation in the first Presidency. To these let Mount Vernon be henceforth devoted; and to none others. The more fully we do this the more durably shall we honor the Father of his country. From these three points rays of light may be made to concentrate themselves anew on his head. It seems to me, that we are bound as patriots and Christians to fasten upon Mount Vernon these three eventful ideas, these three historical associations, these three creative powers of good. Thus will it become a centre toward which every American heart will gravitate. Each State will feel its own presence there, represented in noble sires and a perpetual inheritance.

While we give to marble the likeness of these illustrious men, we are only doing an honor which is done every year to individual benefactors. When as a country, we shall have done this great work, we shall have proved that a republic is not ungrateful; we shall have written a volume of history, whose meaning and authority can never be misused: we shall have engraved, for the world, the grand majestic text of political science, enlightened patriotism and Christian faith. Is it not desirable that this should be done? And where else in the wide land is there another spot so consecrated, so proper, and now so National?

This duty is assigned to us. Our patriot fathers have just died. Does not filial piety demand at our hand the monumental record? These political benefactors have bequeathed to us a free government, whose blessings and hopes we are the first to receive and enjoy; and does not gratitude prompt us to do something, which shall keep them before our own eyes, and transmit their image to our children?

Colonel Trumbull told me, that all the faces and forms, in his pictures of revolutionary statesmen and warriors, were taken from life. How important that those faces and forms should be preserved in marble, beyond the possibility of destruction. We remember what Mr. Adams said of the Convention: "They looked like an assembly of gods." Can we do a better thing for history or for freedom, than transmit to future centuries the exact representation of the dignity of those forms and the intelligence of those faces? Can we better imitate the speaking monuments of Republican Greece and Republican Rome?

Our fathers came together from all the different Colonies, and gladly gathered themselves into one hall; and there consulted, and there pledged life, fortune and honor, to the sacred cause of independence. Why not, therefore, re-assemble these godlike men in the life-preserving marble, and thus make that event a visible fact to all succeeding generations?

At Mount Vernon all sects in religion and parties in politics meet in peace; the only spot in this wide Republic where such a fact is seen! What place then so proper as that for those champions of liberty, who, forgetting all party lines and sectarian differences, stood shoulder to shoulder, battling for a common right and a common country?

As statuary is eminently historical, we ought to cherish it, and imitate the good examples of European States, and begin by applying it to our benefactors. Speaking of a marble statue, Shakespeare says:

"See my lord,
Would you not deem it breathed? and that those veins
Did verily bear blood?
Pol. Masterly done:
The very life seems warm upon her lip.
Leon. The fixture of her eye has motion in't
As we are mock'd with Art."

Is it not time for us to think of our Glyptotheca? What better opportunity can we ask for beginning, under the patronage of government, an American School of the Fine Arts? I truly hope that American Art may find its expression and glory at Mount Vernon.

In my wanderings about those grounds, on the 20th of May last, I found a spot, some distance from the mansion, on which could be erected a granite building for the reception of the marble statues of which I have been speaking. If the form of the present mansion should not be taken, the new building should be after some ancient Republican model, expressive of durability and grandeur. There let the Signers of the Immortal "Declaration" be gathered together, as in the "Hall" at Philadelphia; and there also be gathered the Staff of the great General—himself colossal in their midst.

I have no proposition to make, but would close with saying that coming generations call to us, ere they arrive, and ask that we, who have been contemporaries of these great men, will transmit to them our knowledge of their outward forms and their heroic deeds. Shall parents be deaf to the prayers of their children.

What a Newspaper Does for Nothing.

The following article should be read and pondered well by every man who takes a newspaper without paying for it in advance:

The result of my observation enables me to state as a fact, that publishers of newspapers are more poorly rewarded than any class of men in the United States, who invest an equal amount of labor, capital and thought. They are expected to do more service for less pay, to stand more sponging and "dead heading," to puff and defend more people without fee or hope of reward, than any other class.

They credit wider and longer, get oftener cheated, suffer more pecuniary loss, and are oftener the victims of misplaced confidence, than any other calling in the community.—Some people pay a printer's bill more reluctantly than any other. It goes harder with them to expend a dollar on a valuable newspaper than ten on a needless gew-gaw, yet everybody avails himself of the use of the editor's pen, and printer's ink. How many professional and political reputations and fortunes have been made and sustained by the friendly though unrequitted pen of the editor? How many embryo towns and cities have been brought into notice, and puffed into pro-perity by the press! How many railroads, now in successful operation would have foundered but for the assistance of the "lever that moves the world;" in short, what branch of American industry or activity has not been promoted, stimulated and defended by the press?

And who has tendered it more than a miserable pittance for its mighty services? The bazaars of fashion, and the haunts of appetite and dissipation, are thronged with an eager crowd, bearing gold in their palms, and the commodities there vended are sold at enormous profits, though intrinsically worthless, and paid for with scrupulous punctuality; while the counting-room of the newspaper is the seat of jewing, cheapening, trade, orders, &c. It is made a point of honor to liquidate a grog bill, but not of dishonor to repudiate a printer's bill.

The Sailor in Church.

A celebrated commodore in our navy, having a few hours to spend in port where he was unacquainted concluded to attend a religious meeting, and for this purpose, taking with him his favorite servant, he started off for the church.

Now mind, said he to Jack, as they were going, you must not say a word in the meeting. No one is to speak there but the minister.

Jack, who had been accustomed to obey, as well as see his master obeyed, right or wrong, promised obedience, and they went into church.

A seat was provided for the commodore near the preacher's desk, and Jack, left alone, after looking around the church for some time, was invited to take a seat by the side of one of the deacons. The minister having opened the service, proceeded to give out a hymn, and, as there was a scarcity of books, it became the duty of Jack's neighbor, the deacon, to repeat the lines for the singers, in the congregation. No sooner had he arose than Jack, twitching his coat, whispered in his ear: You'd better be still! I had my orders afore I came in here—so you'd better be still. The deacon proceeded to read, and Jack repeated his admonition, but to no purpose.

The deacon had got out the first two lines and the meeting were engaged in singing, when the poor tar roused to desperation at seeing his commodore's orders disobeyed right in his face and eyes, turned to the deacon and rolling up his sleeves, he exclaimed: You were the beginning of all this here row, and shiver my timbers if you don't pay for it! Suiting the action to the word, he hammered away, first on one side and then on the other, till the whole scene became a powerful illustration of the difficulties of the church militant.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

FIRE. The alarm of fire on Sunday evening last, was occasioned by the burning of a small temporary building used as a blacksmith's shop, by the Railway Village Co. at the West District. It was entirely consumed. Loss trifling. The Granite Company, of course, took the palm on this occasion; but the Niagara, Tiger, and Vulture were close upon her heels.

Also, on Monday evening, a second alarm from the same quarter, was given; it proceeded from the burning of a small shed in the yard of Jonathan Jameson, Esq. In both instances, it was evidently the work of the incendiary.

FATAL ACCIDENT. We regret to learn of the melancholy death of Mr. Adam Hardwick, of Cohasset, provision dealer, a native of this town, which sad event occurred on Tuesday afternoon last. The particulars are as follows: He was on the driver's seat of the Cohasset and Hingham Steamboat Coach, and when meeting about mid-way the downward stage, both coaches stopped, and the reins were passed into his hands, and as the driver left to take tickets, he made a misstep and fell on the horses, starting them, and one of the fore-wheels went over his neck. He lingered half an hour after the fatal injury. Mr. H. was about fifty-four years old—had been a resident of Cohasset thirty years; he leaves a wife and family. His loss will be greatly lamented, as he was universally esteemed by the whole town.

INDIANS. A small detachment, of both sexes, with their pappooses, of these wild children of our country, said to belong to the Old Town Tribe, of the State of Maine, have pitched their tents at the south part of the town, where they are receiving the visits of our citizens, to witness their habits and manners, and purchase the various articles of their handiwork, such as baskets, moccasins, etc., many of which are dexterously and tastefully made. They have their Sachem, or great "Medical Chief," who, from the few simples which he culls from the field of Nature, advertises to cure diseases, which it would seem might baffle the skill of our regular physicians. The medicinal property of plants is well known to the Indian. This tribe has greatly degenerated by the too indiscriminate mixture with other races; they exhibit none of the noble and lofty attributes, and independent mien, which distinguish the true sons of the forest.

AMUSEMENTS OF THE SEASON. Our dwellings have turned their inmates into the streets. The denizens of the workshops have left their unhealthy abodes, to rest their weary limbs on the bosom of mother earth, and snuff the pure breezes of heaven. The St. Patricks' and Bootmakers' Societies, have both, during the week, sought the cool shades of Abington grove, to enjoy, in a Pic Nic way, the rural beauties of the place. Other parties have been regaling themselves at the sea-shore; Nahant and Squantum, and other places of resort, have attracted visitors, to banquet on the bounties of the deep. Business, in consequence, is at a stand still; and must remain so, until our operatives gain new vigor and strength to push it ahead. Even our pedagogues have caught the infection, and left their school-rooms to join in the sport. We saw an outfit for a day's excursion, got up by one of them, which made our heart yearn to be of the company. But fate had decreed otherwise; we must stand up to the rack, even if the type blisters our fingers in the handling.

Read the advertisement of "My Mother's Salve"; then buy a box, and keep it by you in case of accident. Burns, cuts, sores, bruises, sore lips, chapped hands and piles, readily healed by its use. See advertisement.

Troubles are like babies—they grow bigger by nursing. But babies are not, therefore, always troubles.

Boston Correspondence.

Journey to New Hampshire.—Lawrence.—City of Concord; State House and Public Buildings; Jail; Granite; the Quarries; other matters.—Count Rumford.

On Friday noon, the 4th instant, we left Boston on a short trip to New Hampshire, and peradventure if we can get there, the border towns of Vermont, on the Connecticut river. The day was oppressively warm, which lessened materially the comfort of the journey, if any comfort can be taken by travelling in railroad cars and stage coaches in dog days. I do not believe in any such thing, unless it is enjoyment to travel in railroad cars and stages, in which are babies crying, women frightened at every supposed danger, and the cinders of the locomotive finding themselves beneath the membranes of your eyes at uncertain intervals on the route,—to say nothing the inconvenience travellers are subjected to, for refreshing the inner man; catching what you can to eat as the cars momentarily check at the way-stations. In a sanatory point of view, it is the belief of your humble servant, that more persons are injured than benefitted by travel in hot weather. The idea is utopian, to say the least, if not fallacious. We left on the Boston and Maine railroad, passing through Charlestown, Somerville, Malden, Melrose, Stoneham, Reading, Wilmington, Andover to Lawrence. Many of these places in Middlesex and Essex Counties, are pleasant, but as we passed through so rapidly and many times on the borders, we saw but little. About half past one o'clock, we reached Lawrence, as you are aware, a large and wealthy manufacturing place, of some seventeen thousand human beings, with a valuation of six million of dollars or over. This is a thriving locality, still in its infancy. Incorporated into a town in 1847, being formerly a part of Methuen and old Andover, and receiving a city charter in 1853. The factories and many of the buildings are brick and make a fine appearance. Pursuing our way to Methuen and over the State line to Salem, New Hampshire, Windham, Derry, Londonderry, and Manchester, we entered the city of Concord in about three and a half hours ride from Boston. Here being a junction of railroads, the passengers change cars and baggage for several directions, amid no little noise and confusion! Some going to the White Mountains, others in the Claremont railroad, &c. At places like Concord, Bellows Falls or Groton junction, if you are not over careful, you may find yourself on the wrong track, minus, your baggage, pursuing just the course you do not wish to go. A large number of mechanics were at work on the new Depot, the old one having lately been destroyed by fire. The noisy operations of carpenters, and the transfer of baggage and merchandize, rendered things in glorious confusion.

The city of Concord is sixty-five miles northwest of Boston, and may be set down as a beautiful place. The principal part of the city lies on the western side of the Merrimack river, the main street extending two miles, affording one of the most pleasant drives in New Hampshire. In Concord are the State House, State Prison, Court House, and any number of elegant churches. Many of the private mansions would favorably compare for elegance and costliness with the finest around Boston. We strolled up to the State House or Capitol, where the Legislature is wont to assemble in June. It is delightfully located in the centre of the city—enclosed in a spacious yard or green plat, built of hewn granite, it measures one hundred and twenty-six feet in length, and of proportionable width—two stories above the basement. The spread eagle reposing in silent majesty on the top of the cupola, looks down at a height of one hundred and twenty feet upon the denizens below. The State Prison is a solid structure of massive granite. We had no time or inclination to make a call upon its inmates.

We hear much of the Concord granite, and see many buildings in Boston erected of this material. In fact, the granite of Concord, which is nearly white, has been always more or less in competition with the Quincy granite, or more properly speaking, Semite, and no wonder, for the facilities of getting out this article at Concord, are infinitely superior to your town. The great New Hampshire Ledge, so called, is about one and a half miles northwest of the State House, and two thirds of a mile distant from the Merrimack river, which is accessible to this place by boats and railroad. This immense Ledge, rises to a height of three hundred and fifty feet, and presents a surface of over forty-five thousand square rods, and containing stone enough to build a city like London. The stone is said to split easy to the depth of twenty feet and of any length you please, and free from oxides or any other mineral substances. Concord is a wealthy place for an inland city, and has a population not far from ten thousand. It is the pride and centre of attraction of the Granite State. And has been the residence of many distinguished men, among them Count Rumford (Sir Benjamin Thomson) who once was an inhabitant of the North Precinct of Braintree, now Quincy. But I must defer the remaining account of my journey for the present. X

The Nature of Disease.

MR. EDITOR:— Observer, like all "old birds" of his feather, flies off at a tangent from whatever threatens to ruffle his plumage. He tacitly admits, however, the cures of all forms of disease without a particle of medicine," under Water-Cure treatment, which in truth, embraces in its Materia Medica, all the hygienic agencies in Nature; but he ascribes it all to faith and credulity, giving no credit to the Vis Medicatrix Naturæ or powers of Nature.

Such is the constitution of the human mind, and such the force and prejudice of education, that it is extremely difficult for persons once indoctrinated into certain theories, to bring their minds to the investigation on an "unexplored field," of new or conflicting doctrines; but with "long continued perseverance" on the part of its advocates, this doctrine may prevail, and be as well understood and firmly believed two or three centuries hence, as is now that of the revolution of the earth, which was broached two or three centuries since. Observer may think it a long time to wait, but I would remark that not a few believe it all ready. Unprejudiced minds need only to have it clearly explained to be convinced; hence I will offer an explanation.

I have said that disease is, essentially, an effort of the system to expel impurities or foreign matter. Its office then is friendly, because it aims to restore the normal condition, and should therefore be assisted and directed, instead of opposed and subdued, as in the practice of the drug doctors; though not exclusively, for the former has often been "the truth acted upon by Hippocrates and Sydenham" and others, who have been regarded as the best physicians of their time, but strange to say, these very same "well-educated practitioners of sound and rational therapeutics," have been the least dependent on drugs, and have relied almost wholly on the natural efforts of the system.

But, to explain the nature of disease, suppose Observer gets a thorn in his flesh, he would soon perceive the diagnostic symptoms of inflammation, which is disease. If he does not assist Nature by extracting the thorn, she will proceed to expel the enemy, or at least defend the system from injury, by the formation of pus around it; when the thorn falls out, the sore heals, the enemy is expelled, and the normal condition restored.

Again, the system of a person becomes impregnated with miasmatic poison, from living in an unhealthy locality; Nature makes an effort to expel the poison at all the natural outlets — particularly through the skin. This is fever and ague. If the physician gives powerful remedies he may subdue the effort, and prevent the expulsion of the poison, leaving the patient subject to Neuralgia or something worse.

But there is no necessity for the use of drug-remedies for specifics. Nature affords ample hygienic agencies without entering the realm of poisons. The theory that disease is remedial action, requires nothing more than the ordinary conditions of health for its successful application in practice.

PRO ARIS.

For the Patriot,

Pro Aris.

MR. EDITOR:—If the sky should fall, Pro Aris might catch larks. So if he could prove that certain statements are not true, which happen to be facts, he might establish his theory.

He says, "vital action is superior to chemical action." This can be disputed. Vital action may or may not be superior to chemical action. It may be superior to the action of the citric or oxalic acids; but it is certainly inferior to the action of those acids, such as the sulphuric nitric, fluoric, the caustic alkalies, and a multitude of other chemicals.

Let Pro Aris immerse his living finger in a strong solution of caustic potash, or the oil of vitriol. This simple yet beautiful experiment will actively demonstrate a fact, which he affects to doubt. In this example, which is superior, the vital action of the finger, or the chemical action of the caustic? the answer is plain to every one.

Now, if this gentleman, instead of making such assertions, unsupported by evidence, would turn his attention to plain Hygienic articles, relating to diet, exercise, bathing, &c.—matters of real importance to mankind—his writings would be more profitable to readers, and more creditable to himself.

OFFICER'S REGIMENTAL DRILL. The officers of the Fourth Regiment of M. V. M., under Colonel Packard, went through a two days's drill, at Hingham, on Thursday and Friday last. The delegation from the Hancock Light Guards, consisting of Captain Newcomb, with the commissioned and non-commissioned officers, where escorted to the ground in one of Hardwick's fast teams. The encampment broke up early yesterday afternoon, with pleasure and profit, we trust, to all parties.

"Dog Days."

MR. EDITOR: Sirius must have a very baneful influence indeed, when he can affect so sedate, and steady a personage, as the editor of the Quincy Patriot; yet your editorial on this subject clearly proves that you were smitten by the prevalent disease.

It is a great mistake to attribute madness to the person who caused the commotion on that pleasant Sunday evening; neither were his prompters, at all demented. Every thing connected with that affair, was well and carefully planned, and I can assure you that if you buy the principal public performer in the drama for a fool, it will be a bad investment for you.

If you were in Court during the law suits, you would see and hear curious things; but these matters will be developed before a jury, and you will then find what a method was in the madness exhibited that evening.

You mistake in saying that the employers would rejoice in the union of the men. One word from them would settle the whole trouble long since, but they will not speak it.

SOUTH END.

FLYS. We suppose none need be told that these little winged insects are more numerous and troublesome at this season of the year, than when first awakened from their lethargic sleep by the warm suns of spring. The reason probably is, that their numbers have greatly increased by the laws of procreation, and with their growth, have contracted habits which requires more nutritious food than can be gathered from the unsubstantial air. Be that as it may, we are now sure to find them, at our morning, noon, and evening meals, with their bills deeply inserted in the milk-pitcher, butter-plate and sugar-bowl. They never wait for a formal invitation—they are above that—but like privileged guests, help themselves to the choicest dainties, before others have been permitted even to taste. Their unreserved sociability and entire freedom on such occasions, is very annoying to many, often calling down angry imprecations on the heads of the little thoughtless intruders. Nevertheless, they must not be considerd merely drones on the public bounty; Nature, it is said, employs them as agents to cleanse and purify the atmosphere of its impurities—rendering it more healthy and agreeable for the use of man. Various methods have been tried to cut short its brief existence, but with little success; for where one is made to expiate its folly in this way, ten, it is said, will come to the funeral. We should be patient—their visit is nearly at an end; the first frosts of autumn will close their summer-day sport.

STRANGE INFATUATION. A poor, harmless, inoffensive maniac, under a strong hallucination of the mind, aroused the quiet of our community, by parading the streets, with bell in hand, knapsack across the back, and with a frontispiece upon his hat, intimating, in large letters, that he runs an express between Boston and Cape Cod, and that he is the only authorized agent to carry and distribute the United States Mail. What strange phantasies will sometimes take possession of the mind when it once loses its balance. And what pains and labor the possessor will use to keep up the delusion. This poor fellow has been known to travel day and night, accomplishing a distance of over sixty miles, without food or rest. The phrenzy, it is said lasts four or five weeks, when the overtaxed system yields to the demands of nature.

HEALTH OF QUINCY. With the exception of a few billious complaints, common at this season of the year, the place is said to enjoy its usual amount of health. People must be careful, however; they must be moderate and temperate in their manner of living, and not indulge in excesses of any kind. Vegetable food is preferable to too much animal. Ripe fruits are highly recommended. If an observance of these simple precautions does not protect you against the attacks of disease, try a bottle of "Woods' Medicina;" it regulates the digestive organs, purifies the blood, and gives a healthy tone to the stomach—the seat of all kind of summer complaints.

Accounts from Naples, state, that the volcano of Vesuvius was in an active state of eruption. A river of lava, flaming from the crater, was already three miles long, and was destroying orchards and vineyards.

The Navy Department has just made the discovery of the manner in which liquor is smuggled by ships' crews on board of ships. Bread is made into regular ship loaves, inside which are tin cans, holding about a pint, filled with liquor.

An ingenious rascal posted himself close by the railroad track when the Methodist excursion train was returning from Providence to Norwich, (Ct.) and as the ladies waved their handkerchiefs from the car windows, he reached up and caught a whole armful of them at once. He escaped with his plunder.

The Brooklynn (N. Y.) Eagle, says that in one building of that city, of one hundred and fifty feet front, with two stores in the lower story, is a population of two hundred and sixteen in number. Another house, only twenty-five feet in front, with two stores on the ground floor, contains sixteen families, numbering sixty-seven members.

Gigantic drains have recently been constructed under the city of Paris, which conduct the refuse waters of the city into a vast reservoir, whence they are to be disseminated as liquid manure over the most barren plains round Paris.

There is a woman in Buffalo, (N. Y.) who knits in front of the residence of her debtor every day, in the hope of compelling him, by this public manner of dunning him, to pay up. She attracts large audiences, and never gets tired of repeating her story.

The curvature of the earth amounts to seven inches per mile. A man six feet high cannot be seen ten miles.

The following are provisions of the United States law, prescribing "a legal tender;" Gold coins and silver dollars for all sums; half dollars and smaller silver coins for sums not over five dollars; and three cent pieces not over thirty cents. No provision is made for cents, which may therefore be refused.

Scrofula, or King's Evil,

is a constitutional disease, a corruption of the blood, by which this fluid becomes vitiated, weak, and poor. Being in the circulation, it pervades the whole body, and may burst out in disease on any part of it. No organ is free from its attacks, nor is there one which it may not destroy. The scrofulous taint is variously caused by mercurial disease, low living, disordered or unhealthy food, impure air, filth and filthy habits, the depressing vices, and, above all, by the venereal infection. Whatever be its origin, it is hereditary in the constitution, descending "from parents to children unto the third and fourth generation;" indeed, it seems to be the rod of Him who says, "I will visit the iniquities of the fathers upon their children."

Its effects commence by deposition from the blood of corrupt or ulcerous matter, which, in the lungs, liver, and internal organs, is termed tubercles; in the glands, swellings; and on the surface, eruptions or sores. This foul corruption, which genders in the blood, depresses the energies of life, so that scrofulous constitutions not only suffer from scrofulous complaints, but they have far less power to withstand the attacks of other diseases; consequently, vast numbers perish by disorders which, although not scrofulous in their nature, are still rendered fatal by this taint in the system. Most of the consumption which decimates the human family has its origin directly in this scrofulous contamination; and many destructive diseases of the liver, kidneys, brain, and, indeed, of all the organs, arise from or are aggravated by the same cause.

One quarter of all our people are scrofulous; their persons are invaded by this lurking infection, and their health is undermined by it. To cleanse it from the system we must renovate the blood by an alterative medicine, and invigorate it by healthy food and exercise. Such a medicine we supply in the most effectual remedy which the medical skill of our times can devise for this every where prevailing and fatal malady. It is combined from the most active remedials that have been discovered for the expurgation of this foul disorder from the blood, and the rescue of the system from its destructive consequences. Hence it should be employed for the cure of not only scrofula, but also those other affections which arise from it, such as ERUPTIVE and SKIN DISEASES, ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, ROSE, or ERYSIPELAS, PIMPLES, PUSTULES, BLOTCHES, BLAINS and BOILS, TUMORS, TETTER and SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, RINGWORM, RHEUMATISM, SYPHILITIC and MERCURIAL DISEASES, DROPSY, DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, and, indeed, ALL COMPLAINTS ARISING FROM VITIATED OR IMPURE BLOOD. The popular belief in "impurity of the blood" is founded in truth, for scrofula is a degeneration of the blood. The particular purpose and virtue of this Sarsaparilla is to purify and regenerate this vital fluid, without which sound health is impossible in contaminated constitutions.

Compound Extract of Sarsaparilla,

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR ALL THE PURPOSES OF A FAMILY PHYSIC,

are so composed that disease within the range of their action can rarely withstand or evade them. Their penetrating properties search, and cleanse, and invigorate every portion of the human organism, correcting its diseased action, and restoring its healthy vitalities. As a consequence of these properties, the invalid who is bowed down with pain or physical debility is astonished to find his health or energy restored by a remedy at once so simple and inviting.

Not only do they cure the every-day complaints of every body, but also many formidable and dangerous diseases. The agent below named is pleased to furnish gratis my American Almanac, containing certificates of their cures and directions for their use in the following complaints: Costiveness, Heartburn, Headache arising from disordered Stomach, Nausea, Indigestion, Pain in and Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, Jaundice, and other kindred complaints, arising from a low state of the body or obstruction of its functions.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

FOR THE RAPID CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Hoarseness, Croup, Bronchitis, Incipient Consumption, and for the relief of Consumptive Patients in advanced stages of the disease.

So wide is the field of its usefulness and so numerous are the cases of its cures, that almost every section of country abounds in persons publicly known, who have been restored from alarming and even desperate disease of the lungs by its use. When once tried, its superiority over every other medicine of its kind is too apparent to escape observation, and where its virtues are known, the public no longer hesitate what antidote to employ for the distressing and dangerous affections of the pulmonary organs that are incident to our climate. While many inferior remedies thrust upon the community have failed and been discarded, this has gained friends by every trial, conferred benefits on the afflicted they can never forget, and produced cures too numerous and too remarkable to be forgotten.

QUINCY PATRIOT ..... SATURDAY, AUGUST 13.

Poetry.

The Haymaker.

Brave maiden, with the two fold glow
Of health and summer on thy cheek!
Thy thoughts, thy home, I fain would know—
Wilt thou not lift those eyes and speak?

Alone I see thee standing there,
The flush of toil upon thy face,
Amidst the silent summer air,
In nature's calm, unconscious grace.

Thy thoughts? Thou art thyself a thought,
Bodied in light—a magic form,
By memory, love and fancy wrought,
With beauty's blissful breathings warm.

Thy home? Its place not here is found,
Amidst the fairest fields of earth;
A purer air than ours breathes round
The realm serene that gave thee birth.

Fair fruit of thoughtful, loving art!
The sun of Genius ripened thee!
The sunshine of a genial heart
Grows in thee, round thee, lovingly!

No more alone I see thee stand,
Thronged is thy sunny solitude;
Around thee rise a loving band—
Art's children—sweetest sisterhood.

They welcome thee, a sister fair,
With greetings warm, and glances bright;
They bid thee come and with them share
The deathless land of love and light.

A Little While.

Beyond the smiling and the weeping,
I shall be soon;
Beyond the waking and the sleeping,
Beyond the sowing and the reaping,
I shall be soon.
Love, rest and home!
Sweet home!
Lord, tarry not, but come.

Beyond the blooming and the fading,
I shall be soon;
Beyond the shining and the shading,
Beyond the hoping and the dreading,
I shall be soon.
Love, rest and home!
Sweet home!
Lord, tarry not, but come.

Beyond the rising and the setting,
I shall be soon;
Beyond the calming and the fretting,
Beyond remembering, and forgetting,
I shall be soon.
Love, rest and home!
Sweet home!
Lord, tarry not, but come.

Beyond the parting and the meeting,
I shall be soon;
Beyond the farewell and the greeting,
Beyond the pulse's fever beating,
I shall be soon.
Love, rest and home!
Sweet home!
Lord, tarry not, but come.

Beyond the frost-chain and the fever,
I shall be soon;
Beyond the rock-waste and the river,
Beyond the ever and the never,
I shall be soon.
Love, rest and home!
Sweet home!
Lord, tarry not, but come.

Light and Shadow.

You who judge by what you see,
Often fail to judge aright;
Stars are shining solemnly,
In the day, as in the night;
In the day, they lie concealed
By the glory of the sun;
But at eve, they shine revealed
In the azure, one by one.

So the daylight of a smile
May but veil the human face,
Hiding for a little while,
Doubt, and care, and sorrow's trace;
So, when shadow-clouds of woe
O'er a happy face arise,
Still beneath the shadows glow
Stars of joy in gentle eyes.

Life is arched with changing skies;
Rarely are they what they seem;
Smiles we have, and also sighs—
Much we know, but more we dream;
Look beneath the outward show,
To the shadow or the light;
And from what you surely know,
Learn to see and judge aright.

Anecdotes.

Is your horse perfectly gentle, Mr. Dobster?

Perfectly gentle, sir; the only fault he has got—if that be a fault—is a playful habit of extending his hinder hoofs now and then.

By extending his hinder hoofs you don't mean kicking, I hope?

Some people call it kicking, but it's only a slight reaction of the muscles—a disease rather than a vice.

The battle of Kohu, fought between the Austrians and the Prussians, was lost by the latter. Their King, immediately after his defeat, meeting with a Prussian soldier, who had received a severe wound in his face, inquired:

In what beer-shop did you get that scar.

In one, replied the soldier, where your Majesty paid the reckoning.

A fellow was told at a tailor's shop that three yards of cloth, by being wet, would shrink one quarter of a yard.

Well, then, he inquired, if you should wet a quarter of a yard, would there be any left?

A physician told his patient that he could cure his toothache by simply holding a certain root in his right hand.

What root? asked the sufferer.

The root of the aching tooth.

Oh dear! said an old miser, with some twenty thousand dollars, I am afraid I shall come to want.

Never fear, said a friend; you have come to that already. You want a little money the most of any man I know.

Something New.

WE have just added to our stock of PAPER HANGINGS, a large lot of the latest styles, received direct of the manufacturers, which we shall sell cheap.

Hiram Veazie was a plain, good-hea honest farmer's boy, whose parents live a farm where his grandfather was born, a half dozen miles from Augusta, M With a good common school education, a natural aptitude, Hiram was considere the age of twenty, to be a very promi young man, and was certainly of great vice to his father on the farm. Old Mr. zie was comfortably situated as to pecu means; first, because his wants were and secondly, because his land very supplied them all. Miscellaneous.

Skill is Capital.

Hiram Veazie was a plain, good-hearted, honest farmer's boy, whose parents lived on a farm where his grandfather was born, and a half dozen miles from Augusta, Maine. With a good common school education, and a natural aptitude, Hiram was considered at the age of twenty, to be a very promising young man, and was certainly of great service to his father on the farm. Old Mr. Veazie was comfortably situated as to pecuniary means; first, because his wants were few; and secondly, because his land very nearly supplied them all. But when Hiram asked his father to advance him some small amount with which to commence business, the good old man frankly acknowledged his inability, and rather wondered that his son could not content himself on the farm, as his father and grandfather had done before him.

The truth was, that Hiram had from boyhood, and during all his school hours, been the intimate friend and companion of pretty Lucy White, the Squire's daughter, and this childish friendship had ripened with years into love. Lucy's father understood the position of affairs perfectly between the young people, but never interfered, until one day, when Hiram took the old gentleman one side, and asked him for Lucy as his wife, old Squire White, as he was universally called, replied kindly, but firmly, that Hiram must first acquire some trade, and means enough to support Lucy, before he could give his consent to such an arrangement. The future looked blank to Hiram, therefore, for he was but a poor farmer's boy.

Lucy was a gentle and lovely girl of nineteen, as intelligent as she was pretty; she loved Hiram sincerely, but she was too sensible to sit down with him and pine over the situation of affairs. She was a practical Yankee girl, and her advice to Hiram was sound and loving.

Go, she said, to Boston or New York. You are active, good-looking, intelligent and industrious; the very characteristics that command a place, I should say, in a large city, and see if you do not find the means of earning such wages as shall help you to lay by something. I, too, will be industrious, in the meantime, and what little I can save shall go to make up the necessary sum for the purchase of a snug little home for us.

Hiram kissed his little schoolmate, and promised her that she should never for an hour be out of his mind, soon gathered a small sum together, and with the blessing of his father and mother, he took the cars for Boston. It was his first visit to a large city, and at the outset he was almost bewildered; but seeking economical lodging, he began at once to look about him for employment. This he found hard to obtain, but he was daily growing more and more conversant with city life and ways, and he wrote every few days to Lucy a digest of observation and fortunes. A fortnight, or three weeks in Boston made fearful inroads into his slender purse, and at the suggestion of some new acquaintance he determined to go to New York.

Here he passed some two weeks with various adventures, but without finding an hour of paying occupation. He wandered everywhere, observing and searching out places, inquiring freely of all, until he had but a single dollar left in his pocket, and felt for the first time nearly disheartened. In this mood he strolled through one of the uptown cross streets above Union Park, and found his attention attracted by the operation of a steam saw mill, which he entered and quietly watched the business of. He saw a small but efficient engine driving four saws fed by four men, while there stood at a desk hard by, one evidently the manager of the establishment.

Hiram felt a strong interest in what he saw; there were large piles of excellent lumber in the building, an article he was familiar with from childhood, and he watched the progress of sawing it up, carefully observing to what purpose the wood was put, and saw a couple of hands in a further part of the shop engaged in dovetailing the pieces together, and forming the lumber into boxes of various sizes. He consumed so much time, and was so mintue in his observation, that at last the proprietor came up to him and addressed him pleasantly:

You seem to be quite interested? he remarked to Hiram.

Yes. I have seen a good deal of lumber in my day, and I was calculating how much you probably used up in this way.

We use a good many thousand feet every week.

So I should think, and the best number ones too.

Yes, we require the very best stock, and lumber is up now.

How much do you pay?

Twenty-four dollars a thousand; all clear and assorted.

What do you do with all these boxes?

O, we can sell them faster than we can make them, for packing soap, chemicals, &c.

Rather heavy for that purpose, I should say, added Hiram.

Well, they are rather heavy, but we can't get boards sawed any different, they are down to the lowest guage of the lumbering mills.

Hiram looked thoughtful, handled the boxes, examined the saws, talked good common sence in business style to the man, and at last he said, half seriously, half in jest:

You don't want a partner, do you?

Why, no, not exactly; though if I had one who would put in a couple of thousand dollars and would take hold heartily himself, I would not mind sharing the thing with him and throwing in the machinery.

I havn't got any money, said Hiram, but I will give you an idea about this matter, and will take hold and give my time, in a way that I think it will be worth as much as the sum you name in a short time, provided you give me half the business.

I like the way you talk, said the man, honestly: but this is an odd proposition.

You say you pay twenty-four dollars a thousand for your boards?

Yes.

Supposing I bring them down to twelve at once, and make neater and better boxes for your purpose.

If you can do that, I will share with you at once, for my fortune would be made.

Will you give me a chance to try the thing after my own fancy, for one day, say, commencing to-morrow morning.

Yes, said the man, after a moment's hesitation. I can see no harm, though I am to be away to-morrow forenoon.

After a little longer talk, and a careful understanding that there should be no experiment tried that should risk the machinery, Mr. Hurd, the box maker, gave orders to his men that Mr. Veazie was to be obeyed on the following forenoon, the same as though he were himself to give the orders, and that he should return at noon.

Hiram at once took off his coat, measured one of the saws, and asked if it were the largest. He was told that it was; this he was at first sorry, for but still carefully taking his measures upon a piece of paper, he soon disappeared. He remembered a hardware store not far distant, which he had passed that very afternoon; to this he repaired, and selected a circular saw, twice as large as any Mr. Hurd had in his shop, and of a different make in the teeth; he also got some braces and bolts of a size and style which he appeared to understand, and telling the storekeeper that he wanted them for Mr. Hurd in the next street, he found no difficulty in getting them on credit. With matters thus arranged, he returned to his boarding place and studied in his own mind as to how he would carry out the plan he had conceived.

It was about noon on the following day when Mr. Hurd returned to his shop, where he found Hiram Veazie in his shirt sleeves and with a pair of overalls on, at work before a large splitting saw which he had erected upon one of the benches, and to which he had applied the steam power. He was splitting the boards, which were fully thick enough to admit of it, and thus was making the boards produce just twice as many boxes as heretofore, with an equal amount of labor; since those who finished them up into boxes could work enough faster with the thinner lumber to make up for the occupation of one hand to tend the splitting saw.

Mr. Hurd looked on with astonishment. Already were a score of boxes and more manufactured of the new thickness, and they were actually more valuable, as the thickness was ample for all purposes of strength and the weight was reduced one half. He was also delighted at his new acquaintance, who took hold of his work so handily, and above all, he felt that he had at once given him an idea worth half his business or more. Mr. Hurd was an honest and faithful man, and unhesitatingly kept his promise, installing Hiram in the business with one half the profits.

The reader may imagine the letter which he wrote to his faithful Lucy, and how she encouraged him in return, and how the business proved exceedingly prosperous, and how it was enlarged, and Hiram found himself at the end of a twelve-month worth some two thousand dollars; and how Squire White pressed his hand warmly, when he returned, to ask for Lucy, and told him to take her, how Lucy blushing, laid her fair cheek bathed with happy tears upon his shoulder, and her kind old mother said that she had but one regret, and that was to part with Lucy, who must now go away and live in York State.

But all this was so, and Lucy and Hiram were married, and their friends declared that Heaven made the match, and worked a miracle for Hiram Veazie, who was so good, and industrious, and generous spirited. But these are not days of miracles, and the reader knows very well that it was brought about by the most natural agencies.

Four years only have passed since Hiram was married, as we have related in this veritable story, and on the Bloomingdale road, not a long walk from the large factory of Hurd & Veazie, live Hiram and his lovely companion. The large and pleasant house in which they reside is his own, and a handsome surplus besides. Each annual Christmas they return to their childhood's home, and Lucy thinks the journey is healthy for little Hiram Summer Resorts.

In order to derive the highest advantages as to health, from summer recreations, several considerations ought to be kept in view.

Children who are teething should be taken, without an hour's delay, to the seashore—The effect is, in multitudes of cases, instantaneous, radical, and almost miraculous.—Physicians of observation in large cities will testify that children in their second summer, in an almost dying condition, begin to improve on their journey to the coast, and within three hours after leaving the heated and sultry atmosphere of the city in midsummer.

There is something in the salt air of the sea which has a renovating and life-giving power to all whose brains have been overtaxed, and to many whose nervous systems have been impaired by intense excitements, whether arising from business anxieties or domestic calamities. There is also a moral effect for good, in the roar of the ocean, and in the sense of vastness which comes over the mind, as the eye gazes upon it, bottomless, and without a shore beyond; thus causing heart troubles to be swept away in their insignificance.

To persons whose lungs are impaired or whose throats are in a diseased condition, the air of the sea shore is almost always poisonous, sometimes deadly.

To merchants clerks, lawyers; to all who follow sedentary occupations, who are kept within four walls for a large portion of every twenty four hours, no better advice can be given, than to go off among the mountains; climb to their tops; descend into their valleys; penetrate their recesses; on foot, on horse, in every conceivable mode of locomotion; and they should consider every hour of daylight lost, which does not find them in interested motion, in the open air.

The general rule is to effect a change of air. Any change is more or less beneficial There is no locality in any dozen miles apart, whose atmosphere has not ingredients differing in some respects from that of other localities, and the human system greedily drinks in those new or strange ingredients, just as one takes in, with unwonted delight and benefit, the food of a table a few miles from his own home. Both mind and body, the world over, yearn for variety, for change. So that a man living for years in the purest atmosphere on earth will be benefited by a change to one which, although relatively less pure, has either different ingredients, or the same in different proportions. To all who can, we say, go somewhere, go anywhere, rather than stay at home all the time. Go with as light a heart as possible; go determined to get good, and do good, and you will seldom fail of both. But in going, leave all "airs," and mocks, and pretences, and shams behind. Assume nothing; exact nothing; claim nothing beyond what is spontaneously offered by those with whom you may come in contact. In all situations, be courteous, and respect yourself, and you will have courtesy and respect shown you. Acting thus, you will return home healthier, happier, wiser, and better, than you went away.—Hall's Journal of Health.

John Adams, the Federalist.

A LECTURE BY THEODORE PARKER.

In 1634, the General Court of this Colony made a grant of land at Mount Wollaston to enlarge the town of Boston, and in 1636 the inhabitants of Boston granted some of this land in lots to individual settlers or non-residents, who presently formed a church and settled a minister. In 1640 they were organized into a town called Braintree. I find forty acres of land granted to Henry Adams. He died in 1646, and left an estate which was apprised at £75 13s. It consisted of land, a barn, and house, which contained one kitchen, one parlor, and one chamber in the attic, wherein dwelt the eleven persons that made up the family. The inventory mentions three beds, which, I suppose contained them all at night. He left, likewise, one cow, one heifer, swine, some old books, and a single silver spoon. He was grandfather's grandfather to the second President to the United States. It was not a very conspicuous family then, though it has since born two Presidents, and is still strong and flourishing, promising I know not how great future glories. [Applause] On the other side of the sea, antiquaries find the family old and baronical. Indeed, the name would justify a larger genealogical claim, for certainly the Adamses ought to be an old family and a great; according to received accounts, they are the first in the world.

John Adams was born the 19th of October, 1735. His father, of the same name, then forty-four years old, and married but the year before, was a farmer of small means, living in that part of Braintree which is now Quincy; a farmer in summer and a shoemaker in winter; so says the local tradition. When he died, in 1760, he left an estate of thirteen hundred and thirty pounds—four or five thousand dollars in our money. He was an officer in the Braintree militia, several years one of the Honorable Selectmen of the town, and for many years a deacon of the church. He seems to have been a well-educated man, thoughtful, thrifty, useful, with considerable capacity for business, genuine religiousness, great strength of character, and uprightness. Integrity was a virtue which his son might inherit, as well as transmit, if virtue ran in families. John was the oldest child of a family which at length counted twelve! a number not then thought very numerous.

Mr. Parker reviewed the life of Adams, dividing it into epochs, as follows: His childhood and youth; his doings as a lawyer in Suffolk County; his work as a politician in Congress; his services as a diplomatist in Europe; his conduct as Executive of the United States; first Vice-President and then President, and finally, his demeanor in private life, from the time he left the Presidential chair till his death.

We regret that the pressure of other important matters obliges us to pass at once over all this part of the lecture, which abounded in interesting remiscences of those stirring times, and come to the exposition of the character of John Adams, as given by Mr. Parker. Mr. Parker said:

I have not much time to speak of Mr. Adams's character, but will briefly refer to it, dividing it, for convenience sake, into his intellectual, moral, and religious nature.

He had a great mind; quick, comprehensive, analytical, not easily satisfied save with ultimate causes; tenacious of its treasures, his memory did not fail him until he became old. With the exception of Franklin, I think of no American in the eighteenth century who was intellectually his superior; for though Hancock and Jefferson; nay, Jay, Madison and Marshall, really surpassed him in some high qualities, yet none seems so great, on the whole. His understanding was ample. Though constitutionally averse to regular, serious, and long-continued attention, he yet easily gathered what lay before him, and fittingly reproduced it when occasion required. He gathered a great amount of various knowledge, for he was a sharp observer of human affairs. Yet, he attended but little to the world of matter; and save for the economical purpose of agriculture or for the immediate enjoyment of its beauty, he never attended to the world of matter about him. He had no eye for science, no taste for it, except when stimulated by the presence of Franklin. At the age of forty, he was the ablest lawyer in America; the most learned in historic lore, the most profound in the study of first principles. He always went to the fountains of English law, and did not scruple to follow the stream through all its many tributary channels. His first opinion was often faulty, but his final thought was commonly deep, strong, and represented the true relation of things.—Hence, in spite of his great defects, he had naturally instinctive sagacity; and always a sound judgment. In respect to this, I think he has not had justice done him, either by friend or foe. But in all the great acts of his life—in his defence of Captain Preston—his controversy with Governor Hutchinson—his impeachment of the judges—his appointment of Ministers to France, when the nation said "No," and the like—all these things indicate sound practical judgment.

But he lacked method in his intellectual processes. He had not that genius which is its own method, nor yet the sober, systematic habit of work, which, though seemingly slow, is found at last so swift and sure. He did things helter-skelter. In his administration as President there was no rule for anything. He had a fair imagination; above the average of the educated men of that time, but not equal to his understanding. Because he had small opportunity of cultivating it in early life, or developing it in later. Yet he was rather fond of poetry, had an ear for music, and was charmed with the painting, and sculptor, and great architecture, which so astonish the American in Europe. He had great reason, though its culture was defective, and his method capricious and uncertain. He had not the calmness for a philosopher, yet he always looked for the causes of things, studied carefully, and demanded proof.

His philosophical and metaphysical turn appears in all his writings. He was bold in abstract speculation; always bottomed his work on ultimate principles of nature. He is often profound in his remarks; and I think no American politician has ever uttered more profound truths than fell from the mighty mind of John Adams. He certainly had not a mind of the highest class. If he was the first American of that day after Franklin, he was second to him by a long interval, and he had several competitors, not very far behind. He was not quite well balanced; he tipped this way now, then that.

Thus constituted, he was an originator, but not a great one. He was often in advance of his time, especially in planning his scheme for universal religious toleration, and his scheme for the government of the individual States. He ran before the foremost of his time in seeing the necessity for a Navy and for a Military Academy. He sought the Military Academy in 1789, and founded it in 1799.

As an organizer, he had to deal with political ideas, and construct them into a Constitution, but he had only the smallest talent for organizing men. He could plan a government with great skill, but he was never a practical politician, who understands the art of organizing men about his idea, to defend his measures, and make his thought their thing. Here there were many before him, and hence the great failure of his life. Constructing institutions, he could not organize men, nor manage them when organized. He was not a good administrator, except of his own private affairs, where, perhaps, his thrifty wife was the presiding spirit. He had no system, but was governed by the enthusiasm of the moment. In the most important matter, he often went to work fluently, with haste, and without good heed As a diplomatist, at Paris, in 1780, he ran violently down steep places, careless of whom he ran over or against. In 1798, he appointed Washington Commander-in-Chief, never consulting him beforehand. An hour's explanation, or a letter of a few pages, would have saved all the quarrel which grew out of that act. He acted often from personal whim or caprice. In a time of great political crisis, in 1790, he left the seat of Government and went to Quincy, where he stayed months long, leaving affairs to manage themselves, or his treacherous Cabinet to manage them against him.

He was not successful as a diplomatist abroad. When he was Vice President, Washington doubted his fitness for any foreign position. In his administration, he was not great or prosperous. He could not organize a nation well, nor manage his party. Yet it must be confessed that he won a great diplomatic victory in Holland, where he was called the "Washington of Diplomacy."

John Adams had great moral virtues and great vices. Able-bodied, compact, and vigorous, though not always healthy, he had physical courage—in scholarly men, it is a great virtue and rare. He says he meant to be a soldier, but doubted whether he should be a hero or a coward. There was no occasion for the doubt. There was not a drop of cowardly blood in those manly impetuous veins. He inherited what we call "spunk," and we all know he transmitted it. [Loud applause.] He had moral courage in a heroic degree. He could not only face the bullets of a British man-of-war, but he could confront the wrath of his own friends for defending Preston in 1770, and bear the indignation and jeers of the Federal party in 1779, for his adherence to what he believed to be the right. Let him only be sure he was right, and John Adams only feared to be false to his conscience. When the judges at Massachusetts went under the golden chain of Britian in 1773, and the Governor held it low, in order to have them stoop more low before the people, Adams said, "Impeach the Judges!" and the Court did no more business. Conscious of integrity, he never hesitated to take a great responsibility, and to take it alone.

He was a conscientious man, and sought the counsel of that "still, small voice" which declares the law of the universe to whoever listens. He could not understand that a king's command should rule the conscience of the subject. He had a clear conception of justice. Veracious, outspoken, he had an utter hatred of lies, dissembling, and hypocrisy in every form; and not only in the abstract, but he hated liars, hypocrites, and dissemblers in the concrete, as he needs must; a lie in the abstract does not exist. He was terribly open, earnest and direct, and could not keep his mouth shut. He knew this. Once he went with some of his friends to see the great picture of Washington, at Faneuil Hall. Some one remarked upon the firm, well-set mouth—"It looks as if it could keep a secret." So he could, said Mr. Adams; but (with his cane tapping his own bust) that d—n fool never could.

He hated all stratagem and trick, and grumbled at the slow and stealthy way in which Franklin threw in his line, and drew out the glittering spoil. Diplomacy was a silent art; and John Adams was a talker. He wore his heart upon his sleeve. He had not much decorum, no reserve. His early rule was never to deceive the people, nor conceal from them any truth essential to their welfare. He had great moral delicacy, and becoming President, doubted if he might retain his son, John Quincy Adams, in the foreign post to which Washington had appointed him. He consulted Washington on the subject, who told him, "It is right for you to keep him there; it would be wrong for you to put him there."

Mr. Adams had strong temptations to excessive indulgence in animal passions, but he never yielded to the temptation, and in his old age, he proudly writes, "No virgin or matron ever had cause to blush at sight of me, or to regret our acquaintance." Here he was greatly the superior of Franklin, Jefferson, Hamilton, nay, of Washington himself. These are great virtues. Few politicians, or other men, can count so much.

But he was ill tempered, "sudden and quick in quarrel." He was not a good judge of character; he often suspected the noblest men, and put credulous faith in the mean and deceitful. Intensely ambitious of place and power as he was, he yet always sought to rule his desire by his duty. But if he sought only excellent things, the spirit of search was not always commendable; his motives selfish, his manners harsh. He was not a magnanimous or noble man. He was suspicious and jealous of the noblest of men before him in social rank and above him in power. He attributes mean motives to all men—often to the noblest in the land. He does this in his earliest letters and his latest. A round-headed man, he was constantly a fighter. This appears in his diary, and in his newspaper articles before the Revolution and after it; even in his autbiography, writ in his extreme old age. He was violent in wrath, which, when crossed, nothing for the moment stayed. He was indiscriminate as to the cause of it. It might be the members of his Cabinet at the seat of Government, or his butcher in Quincy, who brought in his bill.

Impatient of opposition, and greedy of results, he was most intensely desirous of honor and applause. At Paris, in 1782, he was handsomely complimented for his success in Holland, and he writes in his journal—"A few of these compliments would kill Franklin, if they came to his ears. [Laughter] Franklin would have thought of them as a schoolmaster thinks of a compliment paid to one of his pupils. Yet great as his vanity was, I think it never bent him aside from his duty. Loving the praise of men, he never once stooped for it; never once hesitated to do even the most unpopular act, if he was sure he was right; and he never bowed that head to escape the abuse that came from doing the right thing.

Yet he was intensely arrogant. Claiming much for himself, he abused his rivals. Of Samuel Adams and John Hancock, he writes, on one occasion; "They will be sure of all the loaves and fishes of the National and State Governments, as they hope." A most atrocious calumny. He speaks sneeringly of John Hancock, as "a man without head or heart—a mere shadow of a man; and yet Governor of old Massachusetts!" He did not like to hear the praises of Washington. One day he dined with a company of gentlemen. After the dinner, a clergyman wished to help him on with his cloak. He objected, but the clergyman said, "I cannot do too much for you, when I think what you and Washington have done for the country." Washington and me, growled out the old man, "Don't let me hear you say that again! Washington was a dolt!" It was a momentary spasm of wrath, coming from "that rash humor which his mother gave him," or that came from somewhere else. At other times he did justice to Washington, but always a little coldly, for neither liked much the other.

Certainly, these are great vices; but he had such virtues that he can afford to have them told, and substracted from his merits. He was so fearfully open that it is himself who furnishes all the evidence against himself. He defends Hancock, and says, "If he had vanity and caprice so had I. * * * * But these little flickerings of passion determine nothing concerning essential character," and he said it right. They were vices of the surface; the deep hearts of the men, they were pure and clean—clean down to the bottom.

Mr. Adams had strong religious emotions; but I must pass over what I had written on this theme. He was not what is called an eloquent man. He had no rhetorical tricks; no traps for applause; no poetic images; nothing of what half-educated ministers, sophomores, and editors call "fine writing," what school-girls name "perfectly splendid" [Laughter.] But he had a strong sense, philosophical opinions, condensation and readiness of thought; the form is often defective, misshapen—the substance is always strong and good. Demosthenes said, "The first thing, the next thing, and the third thing in eloquence, is energy;" and John Adams had it to the full extent that Demosthenes wanted. Yet scarcely any of his speeches are left. Their fame survives only in tradition.

He had not much confidence in the people—no instinct of Democracy. He leaned to aristocratic forms of government. So in the Constitution of Massachusetts in 1779, he would give the governor an absolute negative in all acts of the Legislature, and leave him to appoint all the officers of the militia—the Generals, Colonels, Majors, Captains, clear down to the fourth Corporals. He insisted however, on four things, in his plan of Government—separation of the Legislative, Judicial, and Executive powers of the Government; the Legislature must have two branches, a House and a Senate; the Judiciary must be appointed during good behavior, removable by impeachment or address; and the Executive must be one man, not a Council of men. Beyond question he was a great man who made that generalization in 1776.

He was often accused of favoring a monarchy, and it was said he wished to establish a King and House of Lords in this country. The charge is utterly false. When nobody else beheld it, he foresaw the future greatness of America. In 1776 he said, "We are legislating for a population of an hundred millions, which will be here in no great time."

In 1780, Dr. Franklin wrote home to his government: "Mr. Adams means well for his country; is always an honest man; often a wise man; and sometimes, and in some things, is absolutely out of his senses." He adds, "I know that by asserting this, I hazard a mortal enemy.' The criticism was just, as the fear of the consequences was true. But weigh the man in an even balance, his faults are chiefly those of will and temper, and a lack of decorum; his virtues, are patriotism, truthfulness, moral courage, and integrity. These, I think, have seldom been surpassed, rarely equalled in any public man. He had no prejudice against any section of the country. Here he was superior to Jefferson and Washington, who never did justice to New England.

He was an intense patriot, and never hesitated to sacrifice his own dearest wishes and fondest hopes, for his country's good. In his later days, some distinguished foreigners came to visit him at Quincy. He met them by arrangement at a special hour, and sat in a great chair in front of the house, under the shade of a tree. "At the beginning of the fight," asked one of these men, "did you think you should succeed?" "Yes," said the old man, "I knew the country would go through, but I expected nothing but ruin and death for my family and myself." It was very true and characteristic of the man.

The hatred against him has not yet died away from old Federal families and Democratic. Detraction is still busy at its work. But after all just deductions are made from his conduct, it must be confessed that no man had so high, so deep an influence in the great constructive work of founding the best institutions of America; and the judgment of posterity on him will be—A brave man, deep-thoughted, conscientious, patriotic, and possessed of an integrity which never shook, but stood as firm as the granite of the Quincy hills.

While American Institutions continue, the people will honor brave, honest, old John Adams, who never failed his country in her hour of need, and who, in his life of more than four-score-and ten years, though both passionate and ambitious, corrupted no woman and no man.

Fire. The alarm of fire on Thursday evening was caused by the burning of some loose shavings at Weymouth Landing. No damage was done. Our engines were there.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, August 20th, 1859.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

Amusements. The fashionable world still keeps in motion. Social Gatherings, Pic Nics, Water Parties, Fishing Excusions, etc., continue to be the order of the day; there is no abatement in the fever—all classes seem bent upon out-door amusements—to improve the opportunity, and revel in the sports which the season so abundantly furnish. The student and those of sedentary habits would find not only health but pleasure, in occasionally indulging in these innocent pastimes. There are those who act as if they were aware of this fact; one gentleman, who stands high in the world of letters, informed us, that during the summer recess, he has made a half dozen or more prospective trips around our beautiful bay, and intends, before the season closes, to double that number. To his enquiry, why we did not take to ourselves a day of recreation, he was surprised, when told, our business would not permit it; and agreed with us, that there must be a screw loose somewhere in legislation, when the bounties of nature were so unequally distributed among her children.

A Huckleberry (or as the Schoolmaster would say, Whortleberry) Party collected on Thursday last, and proceeded to Scituate woods, where they say these berries grow in great abundance. The way these things are managed, is this: They go to Hardwick's, and get one of his fast teams; with an experienced driver, and an outfit that will accommodate from twenty-five to thirty persons; with refreshments—such as cold ham, cake, pies, etc., and a plentiful supply of Mrs. Woods' Home-made Beer, which is carefully packed in the vehicle, when they take their seats along side—and in a pleasant ride of a couple hours or so, are set down in close proximity with the bushes, where they can gather the ripe fruit; also health, happiness and pleasure, and oftentimes a tender sentiment, on which to build golden hopes for the future.

Another Alarm from the West District. On Monday evening last, a small frame tenement, used in the stone-yard of the Railway Village Co., as a place of storage, for patterns, rigging, and other property, was discovered to be on fire, which was entirely consumed with the contents. Loss estimated at three hundred dollars. The alarm was promptly responded to by the Fire Companies from the Centre and the Point, who were early on the spot, rendering timely assistance with the Granite in extinguishing the flames. This is the second time, within a few days, that this Company have been made sufferers by the lawless acts of the incendiary.

Heavy Robbery in Randolph. The furnishing rooms of Messrs P. & J. McMullen, merchant tailors, at West Randolph, was entered, on Monday evening last, and property to the amount of fourteen hundred dollars taken. Strange to say, a man was in the adjoining building, armed with a revolver, who saw the whole transaction, yet dare not raise an alarm, fearful of consequences.

Encampment at Concord. Our citizen soldiers are burnishing up their armor for the three days' encampment, to come off at Concord, on the 7th, 8th, and 9th of next month. A young friend of ours, who is full of patriotism and military ardor, has been going through the tactics with exemplary zeal, leaving but little doubt that Young America will furnish a Napoleon to give liberty and freedom to Italy.

Still in the Field. Mr. Lombard, it will be seen by his advertisement in another column, notwithstanding his late severe loss, has been able to weather the storm, and with an energy and resolution not to be subdued by momentary misfortune, has replenished his rooms with an entire new supply of goods, fresh from the shelves of the importer. They are a choice lot, to which he would call the attention of his friends, and those in want of fall or winter garments. Terms cash. All orders promptly met, and at the lowest market prices.

New Store. The store on Washington street, which was tastefully remodelled by D B. Stetson, has been leased by the Quincy Store Company, and it will be seen by referring to our advertising columns that they sell none but the best quality of goods and those at the lowest cash prices.

The management, we are happy to state, is under the charge of two of our young industrious merchants, E. W. Underwood and Charles N. Ditson, who are too well known to need any recommendation from us. All our readers will have to do, is, to call and examine their articles, and peep into their smiling faces, and you will find something that you will want.

Religious Services. Rev. Wm. Allen, who was pastor for a number of years of the Second Congregational Society in this town, will preach in this place to-morrow, from his well-known and much-loved desk.

Vital, versus, Chemical Action.

Mr. Editor:—W. M. B. ignores the importance of the doctrine that "medical agents do not act on the living system, but that the system acts on the medicine"; but, at the same time, most strenulously opposes it. He evidently perceives that it strikes at the very foundation of the whole theory of drug-medication, and as he intimates, would doubtless be pleased, if I would write about something else—"matters of real importance."

But I consider this a matter of the greatest importance, as any one may after reading the following extracts, from the lectures of the Professors of the various Allopathic Medical Schools in New York.

All medicines are poisonous.—Prof. St. John. M. D.

I prescribe strychnine, but I do not know how it operates.—Prof. W. Parker, M. D.

All of the curative agents are poisons, and as a consequence, every dose diminishes the patient's vitality.—Prof. Alonzo Clark, M. D.

Of the essence of disease very little is known; indeed, nothing at all.—Prof. S. D. Gross, M. D.

Of all sciences medicine is the most uncertain.—Prof. W. Parker, M. D.

How it is, or why it is, that medicine produce their effects, are subjects entirely beyond our comprehension.—Prof. John B. Beck, M. D.

Opium diminishes the nerve force.—Prof. E. H. Davis, M. D.

Opium increases the nerve force.—Prof. B. F. Barker, M. D.

Digitalis has hurried thousands to the grave.—Prof. Joseph M. Smith, M. D.

Mercury is a sheet-anchor in fevers; but it is an anchor that moors your patient to the grave.—Prof. H. G. Cox, M. D.

From thirty to sixty grains of calomel have been given to very young children for croup.—Prof. A. Clark, M. D.

Five grains of calomel will sometimes kill an adult.—Prof. C. R. Gilman, M. D.

Blisters nearly always produce death, when applied to children.—Prof. Gilman, M. D.

Many of the chronic diseases of adults are caused by the mal-treatment of infantile diseases.—Prof. Gilman, M. D.

The administration of powerful medicines is the most fruitful cause of derangements of the digestion.—Prof. E. R. Peaslee, M. D.

It must be confessed that the administration of remedies is conducted more in an empirical than a rational manner.—Prof. W. Parker, M. D.

The confidence you have in medicine will be dissipated by experience in treating disease.—Prof. Horace Green, M. D.

Such are the confessions of the friends and exponents of the drug system, that they are entirely ignorant of the nature of disease, or of its proper treatment, exhibiting in beautiful contrast the contradictions of the teachers in the same school.

Am I not justified in improving every opportunity to oppose this monstrous system, so like the scheme of Beelzebub?

The Homœopathic claims to be a philosophic school; if so, its disciple, W. M B., should explain how and why medicines effect the object for which they are given, if he would have us believe it is founded on a "sure and solid basis"

In attempting to prove that medicines act on the living body, he does not explain the operation of any medicine, but cites the most extreme cases of poisoning, which he considers "proof of the most conclusive kind."

His proof depends after all on the apparent result of an experiment, and it is about as conclusive as the argument of the Dutchman that "de ting vot ish made ish more superior dan de maker, for a parrel vill hold a goot many gallons of peer, put the maker will not hold more than two quarts."

In one sense sulphuric acid and other powerful poisons may act on the living body, but, like a severe blow, it is the action which kills; it is always destructive to life, and cannot act in conjunction with vital action. Two kinds, as vital and chemical action, cannot exist at the same time and place, any more than two atoms can at the same time occupy the same position or point in space. One must vacate the premises before the other can enter.

When poison is applied to any living part, an inflammatory effort is made to expel it and protect the part, but it is at the expense of vitality—the part dies by degrees. Not until then, when life has departed, leaving dead matter, can chemical action begin.

But in such a case as that of immersing the finger in a powerful poison like sulphuric acid, the process of inflammation and death of the part, followed by the action of the acid, is so rapid and the pain so severe, that it is not surprising that any one who did not understand the process should think that the acid acts or "bites." Pro Aris.

That's the Question. Some like this thing, some like that, but who likes Clam Chowder? Those that do can find an excellent article at French's Saloon, this day and evening.

"My Mother's Salve" cures piles, rheumatism, burns, sore eyes, chapped hands, eruptions on the skin, boils, corns, cuts, etc., instantaneous relief is experienced. See advertisement.

Boston Correspondence.

Sketch of a trip to New Hampshire continued.—Route from Concord to Bradford; prolific shower.—The Water Boy.—Moral reflections.

From the city of Concord, we proceeded on the Claremont railroad, stopping as usual at the various way-stations, at West Concord, Masthead, Contoocook, Diamond's Corner, Warner, Waterloo, Roby's Corner, Melvin Mills to Bradford; distant twenty-five miles from Concord and ninety-eight from Boston, and pretty well up into the mountainous regions of New Hampshire. We coursed at a rapid rate, a considerable distance, near the banks of Contoocook river, a meandering stream of some importance, that waters most of the towns in the western part of Hillsborough County. Near the outlet of this river, is Duston's Island, somewhat famous in Colonial history, as the place where Mrs. Duston in 1698, destroyed in an heroic manner, several Indians, who then inhabited these parts.

The ride to Bradford was through a romantic country, as uneven and rocky as any part of the Granite State, and in appearance, as to fertility of the soil, not very prepossessing to the eye of the traveller. But in general, there were evidences on every side of comfort and independence enjoyed by the inhabitants of these rural towns, although their red-painted dwellings were small and built without regard to the fashion of the day; and their fields, rude of cultivation, the farmers accomplishing all they can by iron industry. Domestic felicity is not confined to costly dwellings, but takes up its abode as often in the cottage as palace. It seeks for its companions, virtue and industry. It respects the "dignity of labor."

In the early part of the afternoon, the weather was sultry and hot, but as we progressed, the clouds began to thicken, and the monotony of the ride was changed by the visitation of a heavy shower, accompanied by thunder and lightning. As the cars pursued their way through the valley, the windows of heaven were opened, and the rain fell in torrents, rushing down the hill tops like brooks, and dashing itself unrelentingly upon our poor bark. The pelting of rain upon a railroad car in motion, gives anything but a pleasant sensation to the passenger within; the elements seemed lashed in fury to wreak their indignation somewhere, but like many of the threatened evils of life, that would approach us in clouds and storms, they pass away harmless, and we in the end find ourselves more frightened than injured. The lightning was vivid and the thunder reverberated with terrible majesty, through the valley, until it died away in the distant regions of northern New Hampshire. A little matter occurred in the route, which, although of trifling occurrence, is worthy of a passing notice.

A short distance before we reached Bradford, the passengers, shut up in the cars by reason of the inclement weather, and thirsty as possible, were regaled at an obscure stopping place by an unexpected refreshment; while waiting to throw off some freight, a little boy entered the cars, with a large tin can of water fresh from a pure fountain, and cold as ice, and courteously distributed the same to the passengers. The beverage was more delicious than the sparkling champagne, as it always is to the truly thirsty person, and it was considered by all as a most opportune act of kindness, although but the gift of a cup of cold water. How often it happens that the humblest manifestation of regard on the part of strangers leaves forever a grateful remembrance on the mind. So true it is, that much of the happiness of this world is made up from little acts of kindness towards one another, which costs nothing and gives but little inconvenience. Much as we mourn over the depravity of human nature, there is that which teaches us a rich vein of philanthropy runs in the community, which shows us after all, that there is more good than evil in the moral world—"Sermons and brooks and stones; and good in everything." x.

For the Patriot,

Count Rumford.

Mr. Editor:—I see by the last communication of your worthy Boston Correspondent, that he made the following statement: "That Count Rumford was once a resident of this town," from which assertion I beg to differ for the following reasons:

We have examined many and various documents with reference to the Count and his family; also Spark's American Biography, in which we find nothing to corroborate the above. The nearest approximation to this statement is made by Mr. Savage, who supposed that the celebrated Benjamin Thompson, Count of Rumford, was a descendant from Rev. William Thompson, the first pastor of the First Congregational Society in Quincy. But Mr. Farmer, the correct and well known genealogist, has traced the Count's descent from a different family; whose ancestors were among the original settlers of the town of Woburn. Who wishes to question Farmer on this point, who has so definitely settled the matter? *

Bootmakers' Strike.

Mr. Editor: It is with great reluctance that I again appear before the public, in a controversy with such a person as "Bootmaker," yet I deem it a duty that I owe to the public and to myself, to show to "Bootmaker, that he does not comprehend what constitutes an agreement, when he asserts so flippantly, that the Bosses agreed not to hire a man who refused to join the Society. The following, from two of our principal manufacturers, speak for themselves:

"We, the undersigned, understand the request of the "Boot and Shoemaker's Society to be, that we will not hire any man who does not belong to the Society.

"We will agree (as we have before) that if workmen, (strangers) come to us enquiring after work, that we will request them to go to your Secretary. But we cannot agree to give up our right to hire whosoever we see fit. "B. Curtis & Co.

"August 17, 1858."

I wish the Workingmen of this town, to examine this agreement and see who was right: "W" or "Bootmaker" in regard to our statements; whether the Bosses agreed not to hire a man who refused to join the Society; now all I can see in the agreement is, that any stranger enquiring for work from the above firm, that they will request them to go to the Secretary, and if he refuse, why then they will hire them if they see fit Again:

"The undersigned agree to recommend to all persons in their employ, or who may seek employment from them on sewed work, to join the "Cordwainers' Society of Quincy," with the understanding that the said Society will be responsible for all stock taken out by its members. "E. W. Marsh & Co.

"Quincy, Sept. 20, 1858."

Every man that worked on sewed work for the above firm, were members of the Society, yet this shop was put on strike because one man, that worked on pay-work refused to join the Society—the Society having already voted to accept this man; and moreover, the agreement expressly stipulates that it is only sewed workmen who are to be recommended to join the Society. The Workingmen can see that there was nothing in these agreements but what the Bosses kept and fulfilled to the letter. The Society has broken faith with the Bosses and sought to injure them, because they thought they had the power. It is for such reasons as these, that many members of the Society have left it, and taken their work out, and not as "Bootmaker" has intimated, because they wish to help the Bosses crush their fellow-Workmen. Had the Society been left to the management of men who work on the seat, for a living, this strike never would have taken place. There is a man in the Society, who keeps a grocery, and has some other occupation, sexton I believe, who wishes to be President of every society which is formed in the town; failing in this, he does his best to break it up, as he has been the death of every thing, in the shape of society, union or political clubs. The Workingmen should send this man about his business, when he goes among them trying to create dissension and strife; they should put

"A whip in every honest hand,
And lash the rascal naked through the land."

If, as "Bootmaker" has intimated, the shops have been put on strike by the men who took out their work, and were so noisy about it until it was done, now that the Society has got clear of them, why don't the good men that are left, re-consider the vote, and do a simple act of justice, to themselves and the employers. The strike on A. C & Co.s' shop is settled; about one hundred and seventeen men are at work on the shop, the poorest of the workmen, with four or five exceptions, are still on strike.

Scrofula, or King's Evil,

is a constitutional disease, a corruption of the blood, by which this fluid becomes vitiated, weak, and poor. Being in the circulation, it pervades the whole body, and may burst out in disease on any part of it. No organ is free from its attacks, nor is there one which it may not destroy. The scrofulous taint is variously caused by mercurial disease, low living, disordered or unhealthy food, impure air, filth and filthy habits, the depressing vices, and, above all, by the venereal infection. Whatever be its origin, it is hereditary in the constitution, descending "from parents to children unto the third and fourth generation;" indeed, it seems to be the rod of Him who says, "I will visit the iniquities of the fathers upon their children."

Its effects commence by deposition from the blood of corrupt or ulcerous matter, which, in the lungs, liver, and internal organs, is termed tubercles; in the glands, swellings; and on the surface, eruptions or sores. This foul corruption, which genders in the blood, depresses the energies of life, so that scrofulous constitutions not only suffer from scrofulous complaints, but they have far less power to withstand the attacks of other diseases; consequently, vast numbers perish by disorders which, although not scrofulous in their nature, are still rendered fatal by this taint in the system. Most of the consumption which decimates the human family has its origin directly in this scrofulous contamination; and many destructive diseases of the liver, kidneys, brain, and, indeed, of all the organs, arise from or are aggravated by the same cause.

One quarter of all our people are scrofulous; their persons are invaded by this lurking infection, and their health is undermined by it. To cleanse it from the system we must renovate the blood by an alterative medicine, and invigorate it by healthy food and exercise. Such a medicine we supply in the most effectual remedy which the medical skill of our times can devise for this every where prevailing and fatal malady. It is combined from the most active remedials that have been discovered for the expurgation of this foul disorder from the blood, and the rescue of the system from its destructive consequences. Hence it should be employed for the cure of not only scrofula, but also those other affections which arise from it, such as ERUPTIVE and SKIN DISEASES, ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, ROSE, or ERYSIPELAS, PIMPLES, PUSTULES, BLOTCHES, BLAINS and BOILS, TUMORS, TETTER and SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, RINGWORM, RHEUMATISM, SYPHILITIC and MERCURIAL DISEASES, DROPSY, DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, and, indeed, ALL COMPLAINTS ARISING FROM VITIATED OR IMPURE BLOOD. The popular belief in "impurity of the blood" is founded in truth, for scrofula is a degeneration of the blood. The particular purpose and virtue of this Sarsaparilla is to purify and regenerate this vital fluid, without which sound health is impossible in contaminated constitutions.

Compound Extract of Sarsaparilla,

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR ALL THE PURPOSES OF A FAMILY PHYSIC,

are so composed that disease within the range of their action can rarely withstand or evade them Their penetrating properties search, and cleanse, and invigorate every portion of the human organism, correcting its diseased action, and restoring its healthy vitalities. As a consequence of these properties, the invalid who is bowed down with pain or physical debility is astonished to find his health or energy restored by a remedy at once so simple and inviting.

Not only do they cure the every-day complaints of every body, but also many formidable and dangerous diseases. The agent below named is pleased to furnish gratis my American Almanac, containing certificates of their cures and directions for their use in the following complaints: Costiveness, Heartburn, Headache arising from disordered Stomach, Nausea, Indigestion, Pain in and Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, Jaundice, and other kindred complaints, arising from a low state of the body or obstruction of its functions.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

FOR THE RAPID CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Hoarseness, Croup, Bronchitis, Incipient Consumption, and for the relief of Consumptive Patients in advanced stages of the disease.

So wide is the field of its usefulness and so numerous are the cases of its cures, that almost every section of country abounds in persons publicly known, who have been restored from alarming and even desperate diseases of the lungs by its use. When once tried, its superiority over every other medicine of its kind is too apparent to escape observation, and where its virtues are known, the public no longer hesitate what antidote to employ for the distressing and dangerous affections of the pulmonary organs that are incident to our climate. While many inferior remedies thrust upon the community have failed and been discarded, this has gained friends by every trial, conferred benefits on the afflicted they can never forget, and produced cures too numerous and too remarkable to be forgotten.

Nothing, child, to ease thy pain.
When God sent thee first to bless me,
Proud, and thankful too, was I:
Now, my darling, I, thy mother,
Almost long to see thee die.
Sleep, my darling, thou art weary;
God is good, but life is dreary.

"I have watched thy beauty fading,
And thy strength sink day by day,
Soon, I know, will want and fever
Take thy little life away.
Famine makes thy father reckless,
Hope has left both him and me;
We would suffer all, my baby,
Had we but a crust for thee.
Sleep, my darling, thou art weary;
God is good, but life is dreary.

"Better thou shouldst perish early,
Starve so soon, my daring one,
Than live to want, to sin to struggle
Vainly still, as I have done.
Better that thy angel spirit,
With my joy, my peace, were flown,
Ere thy heart grow cold and careless,
Reckless, hopeless, like my own.
Sleep, my darling, thou are weary;
God is good, but life is dreary.

"I am wasted, dear, with hunger,
And my brain is all opp essed;
I have scarcely strength to press thee,
Wan and feeble to my breast.
Patience, baby, God will help us,
Death will come to thee and me,—;
He will take us to his heaven,
Where no want or pain can be.
Sleep, my darling, thou art weary
God is good, but life is dreary."

Such the plaint, that, late and early,
Did we listen, we might hear
Close besides us—but the thunder
Of a city dulls our ears.
Every heart, like God's bright angel,
Can bid one such sorrow cease:
God has glory when his children
Bring his poor ones joy and peace!
Listen—hearer, while she sings,
Sounds the flattering of wings.

Be Content.

Mistaken mortal, ever fretting,
Grasping, grinding groaning, getting,
Be content!

If thou hast enough, be thankful,
Just as if thou had'st a bankful,
Be content!

If fortune cast thy lot but humble,
Earn thy bread and do not grumble,
Be content!

Have the rich, think'st thou no trouble?
Twice thy wealth, thy sorrows double,
Be content!

List the lore of learned sages—
Those wise men of the Grecian ages,
Be content!

Their reckoning up all earth's riches,
Was compressed in one short phrase, which is
Be content.

The rich man gets, with all his heaping,
But dress and drink, and food and sleeping,
Be content!

Though in sleep the rich men gain not,
Poor men sleep when rich men may not,
Be content!

Remember, thou for wealth who rakest
"Nought thou broughtest, nought thou takest"
Be content!

Irresistible.

She tied the new cravat
Which she so kindly made me;
Then smoothed with care my hat,
And with her arms delayed me;
She brushed my "glossy hair,"
And said it was so curly!
While going down the stairs,
She cried: Come home, DEAR, early!

How happy then was I,
With all I e'er desired;
I fortune could defy
While thus I was admired!
We parted at the door—
Her smile deserved a sonnet!
Dear love, but one thing more,
I want—a new Fall BONNET.

Anecdotes.

A militia officer seeing a negro whom he knew, exclaimed:

Ah, Sambo, you are an honest faithful fellow—I'll give you a drink.

With all my heart, sar, said Sambo. With all dis child's heart. Some niggers are haughty and proud, and won't stoop to drink with a milishy officer; but that's wrong. I tink a milishy officer almost, if not ebery way, as good as a nigger—'specially when a nigger's dry.

A beggar importuned a lady for alms; she gave him a shilling.

God bless your ladyship! said he, this will prevent me from executing my resolution.

The lady, alarmed, and thinking he meditated suicide, asked what he meant.

Alas, madam! said he, but for this shilling I should have been obliged to go to work.

Sir, said a young wife to her husband a few days after marriage, you were honest enough to tell me that your chimney smoked, but why didn't you tell me that you smoked yourself?

I say, Bill, then you are getting two dollars a week now?

Well, you might a knew that, by seeing all the fellers come soapin' around me that would not notice me when I was poor.

Doctor, what do you think is the cause of this frequent rush of blood to my head?

O, it is nothing but an effort of nature.—Nature, you know, abhors a vacuum!

An Impatient Mother

Two children, a boy and a girl, playing happily together, and had been ing in the most perfect harmony for ov hour. The pleasure of one seemed to pleasure of the other. If Amy sugge some new amusement, John agreed in ful good humor; and it was the same Amy, if her brother proposed any chan their sports or employments.

Let us play with paper dolls, said A last, growing weary over the toy-h which they had been building.

John was ready for paper dolls or an else his little companion might propose Amy brought from the closet her b painted dresses, and the two childre down upon the floor to arrange and fi upon the figures of men and wome were also contained in the box.

O dear! said Amy, affecting a to annoyance. All my Flora's dresses ar of fashion. She must have one of th talmas before she can go walking 'Won't you paint me a new dress and for her, if I can cut them out?

Nothing could have pleased John, time, better than this proposal. He singing off up stairs for his paint-box. Amy tripped away in the happiest moo sible, to her mother's room, and comm turning over the things in her work-bas

What do you want there? the m spoke in quick, angry tones.

Amy started and drew back a step From the basket, her face flushing, cloud darkening the pure brow on whi sunshine rested only a moment before.

I want the scissors, answered the Well, you can't have them. So g with you.

I want to cut some new dresses Flora, urged the child, again appro the basket, and diving her hand in the labyrinth of spools, tape, muslin an which it contained. A sudden chan come over her childish pessistence, she to obtain the article desired.

Didn't I tell you that you couldn't them, exclaimed the mother, still losing temper, and, at the same time ing Amy by the arm, and jerking he considerable force from the basket.

The child did not complain. She w one of the kind that make a loud outcry time their wishes are thwarted. Yet s not feel this unkindness of her moth the less. It fell like a shadow upo young spirit, and dimmed for the time brightness.

When Amy returned to the room in only a few minutes before she had with her brother, her mood of mind w tirely changed. He was already ther his box of paints and a sheet of white from which to cut the new dresses for

Did you get the scissors? he asked.

No, answered Amy, pouting her l looking very unamiable.

Why?

Mother would not give them to me.

John looked disappointed. He st a little while, looking now at the pa and sheet of paper in his hand, and the altered face of his sister; the sist whom he had been playing so sweetl hour.

Never mind, he said at length, in forting voice. Flora will have to her new cloak. She must wear on new dresses to-day. Here is a ha one.

And stooping to the box on the f lifted therefrom a green plaid walkin Flora will look handsome enough in t he, in a cheerful voice.

Miscellaneous.

An Impatient Mother.

Two children, a boy and a girl, were playing happily together, and had been playing in the most perfect harmony for over an hour. The pleasure of one seemed to be the pleasure of the other. If Amy suggested some new amusement, John agreed in cheerful good humor; and it was the same with Amy, if her brother proposed any change in their sports or employments.

Let us play with paper dolls, said Amy at last, growing weary over the toy-houses which they had been building.

John was ready for paper dolls or anything else his little companion might propose. So Amy brought from the closet her box of painted dresses, and the two children sat down upon the floor to arrange and fit them upon the figures of men and women that were also contained in the box.

O dear! said Amy, affecting a tone of annoyance. All my Flora's dresses are out of fashion. She must have one of the new talmas before she can go walking again. Won't you paint me a new dress and cloak for her, if I can cut them out?

Nothing could have pleased John, at the time, better than this proposal. He went singing off up stairs for his paint-box, while Amy tripped away in the happiest mood possible, to her mother's room, and commenced turning over the things in her work-basket.

What do you want there? the mother spoke in quick, angry tones.

Amy started and drew back a step or two from the basket, her face flushing, and a cloud darkening the pure brow on which the sunshine rested only a moment before.

I want the scissors, answered the child. Well, you can't have them. So go away with you.

I want to cut some new dresses for my Flora, urged the child, again approaching the basket, and diving her hand in among the labyrinth of spools, tape, muslin and cord which it contained. A sudden change had come over her childish persistence, she meant to obtain the article desired.

Didn't I tell you that you couldn't have them, exclaimed the mother, still further losing temper, and, at the same time catching Amy by the arm, and jerking her with considerable force from the basket.

The child did not complain. She was not one of the kind that make a loud outcry every time their wishes are thwarted. Yet she did not feel this unkindness of her mother any the less. It fell like a shadow upon her young spirit, and dimmed for the time all its brightness.

When Amy returned to the room in which only a few minutes before she had parted with her brother, her mood of mind was entirely changed. He was already there with his box of paints and a sheet of white paper, from which to cut the new dresses for Flora.

Did you get the scissors? he asked.

No, answered Amy, pouting her lips and looking very unamiable.

Why?

Mother would not give them to me.

John looked disappointed. He stood for a little while, looking now at the paint box and sheet of paper in his hand, and now at the altered face of his sister; the sister with whom he had been playing so sweetly for an hour.

Never mind, he said at length, in a comforting voice. Flora will have to wait for her new cloak. She must wear one of her new dresses to-day. Here is a handsome one.

And stooping to the box on the floor, he lifted therefrom a green plaid walking-dress. Flora will look handsome enough in this, said he, in a cheerful voice.

I don't want to play at paper dolls. Amy looked still more unlovely. The frown on her brow was heavier, and her lips pouted to a degree that sadly marred her childish features.

John's face now became troubled. The current of his feelings, which had been gliding along so smoothly, with the sunshine on its breast, commenced rippling over stony obstructions. He sat down upon the floor, beside the box of paper dolls, and in a listless kind of a way commenced turning over the figures and dresses. Presently he took up a bonnet, and began bending the front of it backwards, though not in a manner to injure or disfigure it.

Don't do that! said Amy, curtly. You'll spoil the bonnet. And she came quickly forward, and reached out her hand to take the small piece of painted card-board from her brother. John, instead of giving it up in a kind way, was offended at his sister's manner, and thrust the bonnet behind him out of her reach.

Give it to me, John! The child's reddening face marked her quickly rising anger.

But John did not yield. He still kept the bonnet beyond her grasp.

I'll tell mother if you don't give me my doll's bonnet, cried Amy, with increasing ill nature.

Tell her. I don't care! replied the boy.

Give me the bonnet?

I won't until I please.

Mother. Amy turned to the door, crying out in an imperative manner.

What do you want? The tone in which this query was uttered, showed the mother's state of feeling to be quite as much disturbed as those of her children.

John won't give me my doll's bonnet!

John! the mother called to him sharply.

I'm not hurting the bonnet, answered John.

Yes, he is, mother. He's bending it all up, and spoiling it,

It's no such thing, mother, responded John.

John! called the mother sternly.

Ma'am!

Give Amy her doll's bonnet in an instant.

There, take the bonnet, you mean selfish thing! And John threw the bonnet upon the floor.

Mother! he won't give it to me! called out the thoroughly exasperated little girl, as she saw the bonnet tossed upon the floor.

At this, the mother threw from her hand the work upon which she was engaged, and starting up in a passion, came, with quick step, and a resolute air, into the room where her children were in dispute.

Didn't I tell you to give your sister her doll's bonnet? she exclaimed, seizing the now frightened little boy by the arm, and holding him with a tight grip. Say, did'nt I tell you? What do you mean by such conduct.

And without waiting for an explanation, she struck him one or two blows.

I did give it to her, said John, as soon as he could find his voice. There it is lying at her feet now.

You didn't give it to me. You only threw it at me, was indignantly answered by Amy.

The mother saw that Amy had partly deceived her, and that she had been too quick to punish.

You are a naughty, story-telling girl! she said, turning with new indignation towards Amy, and raising her hand to punish her also. But something in the aspect of the child stayed the uplifted hand, and the smarting strokes fell not upon the frightened culprit.

Naughty children! she said as she regained a little self-possession. Naughty children, to be always quarrelling with one another! I am surprised and ashamed of you. What will your father think when he hears of this? How will he feel when he learns that his little boy and girl have been angry with one another? It makes me sick and sad to think that my children should act so wickedly!

Very little of a right impression did the mother's censure make upon the minds of her unhappy children, the sunshine of whose pleasant day her own darkening anger had clouded. They stood with partly averted faces; silent, moody, and with unkindness in their hearts. Their apparent want of penitence fretted their weak mother's mind. She looked for, or at least expected, an obedient yielding on their part. She expected them to kiss and be friends again, at her word, as if love and kindness were vassals that came and went at another's bidding. But she could not command the sun of love to shine, nor scatter with the breath of her lip, the shadows that were around their young spirits.

I must separate you! she at length said, with a sternness of voice and manner that showed more of angry indignation than love. Amy, do you go over into my room, and stay there alone until I call you; and, you John, go off to the garret, and don't let me see your face until your father comes home. I shall tell him of all this.

As if any place would be more agreeable than that in which their mother's presence smote them; the two children at this command, went quickly away. Amy, to her mother's room, and John up into the lonely garret.

Both the instant they were entirely alone, abandoned themselves to grief; Amy sobbing as if her heart would break, and John standing still in the centre of the garret floor, with scalding drops falling rapidly over his burning cheeks. To the boy there was a cruel mystery in the sudden change towards him which his sister had manifested. He understood that her mother had refused to let her have a pair of scissors to cut out dresses for her paper dolls, and he could understand how this would fret her mind; but he was too young and unskilled in the philosophy of mental transitions to comprehend how the disappointment should have wrought in her so great a change of feeling toward himself, and caused her to act with selfish unkindness.

If John's mother had not punished him, he could have forgiven Amy. But the blows, though felt only for a moment by his shrinking body, still smarted on his spirit as painfully as when they were given in sudden anger. In a little while the boy's tears ceased to flow. Sitting down on an old chest, and in the shadow of an unhappy mood, he brooded in loneliness and sorrow over the early mystery of life, and learned one of his first lessons of hate towards those by whom he felt that he had been wronged. An evil seed had been sown in the earth of his young heart, and already, its latent principle of life was moving with a vital force.

I'll lock up all my picture-books, he said to himself, spitefully. Amy shan't look into one of them again as long as she lives. I wont play with her any more, nor paint another doll's dress for her. I'll throw her kitten from the window, and let her canary out of the cage—and I'll burn every one of her playthings that I can put my hands on.

Now, though John never executed any of these direful threats against his little sister, he was really in earnest when he made them, so full of bad feelings was his heart. And, though on the very next day he passed hours with her in sport, he did not feel right towards her, and was not so willing to yield his wishes for her pleasure as he had been in times past.

As for Amy, poor child! She was wretched enough; alone in her mother's room, when but for that mother's angry refusal to let her have a pair of scissors, she might still have been playing happily with her brother, who had been separated from her, and sent away up into the garret, where she was afraid to stay all by herself even for a single moment.

An hour after the mother had punished her children, she laid aside her work, and went over into her chamber to see what Amy was doing.

Into some mischief, I'll warrant! she said to herself, as she thought how very quiet the child had been. But she found her asleep on the floor, with tears undried upon her cheeks. A sudden tenderness came over her feelings, and lifting the beautiful sleeper in her arms, she laid her upon the bed, and smoothing back the moist hair from her forehead, stood and looked for some moments into her still sad face. She sighed heavily; the mother's love came rushing back into her heart, and bending down to the little one she kissed her tenderly.

Then a thought of John caused her to turn from the bedside and go out into the passage, and up to the third story of the house. Standing from the foot of the garret stairs, she called him in a suppressed voice. No answer came. She waited for a few moments and then called once more. But only the echo of her voice came down to her listening ears. A few hurried steps brought her to the room up to which she had banished her offending boy. He too was asleep, lying upon the old chest where he had first seated himself. His head was resting upon the hard wood, and the position of the body was in all respects a most uncomfortable one.

John! She laid her hand upon him.

The boy started up with a terrified air. He had been dreaming of his sister; they had quarrelled in the dream, and he had struck her a heavy blow on the head with a piece of iron, and seen her fall bleeding to the floor. At this moment the voice of the mother had awakened him.

Oh mother! I didn't mean to do it! he cried out, looking fearfully around him.

Do what, my child? was asked in a soothing voice.

For a moment or two John continued to glance around him in a bewildered manner, and then said, as he leaned his face upon his mother, and burst into tears:

It was only a dream.

Tenderly his mother drew her arm around him, as she said in tones of gentle admonition:

Naughty feelings brings naughty dreams.

Ah, if she could have known that for this naughty dream, she was responsible, and not the child, it might have been better for that child, and for all her children in the great future of their lives.

Mothers, be patient with your children. Wrong them not by sudden anger. Mar not the beauty of their young spirit. If they are wont to be angry with one another, to quarrel in their plays, to have the sunshine of good humor suddenly fade, look close to yourselves and see if the cause thereof does not lie mainly at your own doors. Of one thing you may be very sure, impatient mothers, will have impatient, wrangling, unhappy children.

The law of cause and effect is as immutable in this as in all other cases. And we beg of you, for the sake of your precious children, to receive this lesson into your hearts.—Arthur's Home Magazine.

Cost of a Newspaper.

We read, a short time since, in one of our exchanges, the remark that it takes nearly one dollar and fifty cents to publish a weekly newspaper. We should think it does. How any paper of usual size, can be published for one dollar and fifty cents, without losing money, we have not yet been able to discover. This secret is yet a sealed book to us.

Papers are springing up all over the country, and in order to force out a circulation, offer their issues at subscription prices ruinous to themselves, and injurious to their cotemporaries. Thus the business of Journalism, in localites where a newspaper can be supported under ordinary circumstances, is crippled, and to a very great extent rendered unprofitable. Some men think it is glory and honor enough to have the name of being the editor of a paper. Such usually find out by waiting, that such honors are empty, and devoid of the capacity to furnish meat and bread for the wife and children. The result is, that very often the enterprise proves a failure, creditors suffer, and the fortunate adventurer becomes, pecuniarily a wreck. It takes money to carry on a newspaper, and it takes patronage to bring in money, and that patronage must pay remunerative prices.—Where this is not the case, failures will always be the consequence. So much for publishing a newspaper at losing rates.

Hope and Memory.

A little babe lay in its cradle, and Hope came and kissed it. When its nurse gave it a cake, Hope promised another to-morrow; and when its young sister brought a flower, over which it clapped his hands and crowed, Hope told of brighter ones which it should gather for itself.

The babe grew to a child, and another friend came and kissed it. Her name was Memory. She said, Look behind thee, and tell me what thou seest. The child answered, I see a little book. And Memory said, I will teach thee how to get honey from the book, that shall be sweet to thee when thou art old.

The child became a youth. Once, when he went to bed, Hope and Memory stood by the pillow. Hope sang a melodious song, and said, Follow me, and every morning thou shalt wake with a smile as sweet as the merry lay I sang thee.

But Memory said, Hope, is there any need that we should contend? He shall be mine as well as thine. And we will be to him as sisters all his life long.

So he kissed Hope and Memory, and was beloved of them both. While he slept peacefully, they sat silent by his side, weaving rainbow tissue into dreams. When he woke, they came with the lark, to bid him good morning, and he gave a hand to each.

He became a man. Every day Hope guided him for his labor, and every night he supped with Memory at the table of Knowledge

But at length Age found him, and turned his temples gray. To his eye the world seemed altered. Memory sat by his elbow chair, like an old and tried friend. He looked at her seriously, and said, Hast thou not lost something that I entrusted to thee?

And she answered, I fear so, for the lock of my casket is worn. Sometimes I am weary, and then Time purloins my key. But the gems thou didst give me when life was new—I can account for all—see how bright they are.

While they thus sadly conversed, Hope put forth a wing that she had worn, folded under her garment, and tried its strength in a heavenward flight.

The old man lay down to die, and when his soul went forth from the body, the angels took it. And Memory walked with it through the open gate of heaven. But Hope lay down at its threshold, and gently expired, as a rose giveth out its last odors. Her parting sigh was like the music of a seraph's harp. She breathed it into the bosom of a glorious form, and said:

Immortal Happiness! I bring the a soul that I have led through the world. It is now thine. Jesus hath redeemed it.

The Coal Districts.

There are two distinct theories respecting the formation of coal, though all agree that it is of vegetable origin. This is proved by the trees and plants found in the substance of coal, by the vegetable remains imbedded in the accompanying strata, and by microscopical examination. The plants most abundant are ferns, some of which were of gigantic size. These are supposed to have composed two-thirds of the mass of most coal.

The vegetation from which coal has been formed, according to the views of some geologists grew on the place where it is found, and they consider it to have been composed of decayed beds of peat, which grew in succession, one over the other, and that by the compression of the whole, when submerged, and by the accompanying action of heat, these vegetable beds were converted into coal. Other geologists imagine that it was produced by the accumulation of drift wood, brought down by great rivers, similar to the present accumulation of drift wood on the coast of Mexico, brought down by the great American rivers. There are geological facts adduced in support of both theories. Ireland presents the remarkable geological feature of an immense area of carboniferous rocks, without coal, that valuable portion of the deposit having, it is supposed, been swept away by some of the denudations to which the surface of the globe has been exposed in the early periods of its history.

How to Meet a Duellist.

A few years since, as a New England gentleman whose name was Brown, was passing a few days at a hotel in Ohio, he had the misfortune to unintentionally offend the susceptible honor of a tall Indiana colonel, who was one of the boarders. His apologies not being satisfactory, a challenge was sent him, which, however, he declined, on the ground of conscientious scruples.

The colonel, who, by the way, had won in two or three encounters, quite a reputation as a duellist, at once conceived the idea that his opponent was a coward, and resolved to disgrace him, by flogging him in the face of the assembled wisdom of the house.

Accordingly, the next day, at dinner time in marched the duellist, armed with a formidable cowhide, and advancing to Brown's chair, proceeded to dust his jacket for him in the most approved style. Brown was astonished. Luckily, he had been a lieutenant of militia in his native state, and knew the importance of incommoding his enemy by a diversion; so seizing a gravy turreen, he tossed the contents into the face of the belligerent colonel, and before the hero could recover from the drowning sensation thus occasioned, he sprang upon the table, and began to shower upon him, with a liberal hand, the contents of the dishes around.

You are an infernal—

Coward; the colonel was about to say: but at that moment a plate of greens struck full upon his mouth, and the words were blockaded and lost forever.

Ha! cried the little New Englander, whose blood was now up; fond of greens, are you? take a potato, too! and he hurled a telling volley of hard potatoes at him. Excellent eggs here; capital things with calf's head! and crash came a plate of soft-boiled eggs against the side of his cranium.

The blows of the cowhide, which had hitherto descended upon the Yankee's head and shoulders, now began to fall more weakly and wildly; and it became evident that the assailant, half-stunned, choked, and partly blinded, was getting the worst of it. His courage was fast oozing out.

Take a turkey, shouted Brown, as a noble old gobbler descended upon the colonel's head, and bursting, filled his hair and eyes with delicious stuffing.

Here's the fixings! he continued, as the squash and jelly followed after.

By this time the colonel was irretrievably defeated; and, as his merciless opponent seized a huge plum pudding, steaming hot, and holding it above his head with both hands seemed about to bury him beneath it, he quailed in terror, and throwing down the cowhide, turned about and made a rush for the door.

Stop for the pudding, colonel; stop for the pudding! shouted Brown.

Pudding, colonel, pudding! screamed all his fellow boarders, amid convulsions of laughter.

But the colonel was too much terrified to listen to their kind invitations, and did not cease running until he had locked himself into his room.

But, although the colonel escaped from plum pudding, he could not escape from the ridicule which the affair occasioned.

He subsequently challenged four persons, against whom his ire was excited, and they all consented to fight; but, availing themselves of the privilege of the challenged party, appointed pudding-bags for their weapons. At length, the unfortunate duellist, finding no one who was willing to shoot, or be shot at, was obliged to leave the state.

Tea and Coffee of Commerce.

In a paper read to the Chemical Society, London, evidence of an unquestionable character has been given that the Prussian blue, together with gypsum and a yellowish vegetable color, which proves to be turmeric, are used by the Chinese for glazing or facing some of the teas of commerce. The assertion that the blue coloring matter is indigo, as has been put forth by some writers, is thus disproved. In regard to the causes of the characteristic physical differences which exist between black and green teas—both of which can be, and frequently are, prepared from the leaves of the same plants, these are ascribed to the manner of treating the leaves previous to drying and roasting them, which gives rise to a species of fermentation, accompanied with oxidation, by which the natural green color of the leaf is destroyed, and a black tea produced. Another system of adulteration is practiced in China to a great extent, which consists in making the dust or powder of tea, together with sand and dirt, into a paste with gum, and granulating it so as to resemble genuine dried leaves; this mixture is colored with plumbago for black tea, and with the facing already alluded to for green tea, and then scented.

Coffee adulterations are carried on nearer home. The results of thirty-four examinations of coffee of all prices, showed that all the coffee, with two exceptions only, were adulterated—that chicory was present in thirty-one instances, roasted wheat in twelve, colored matter in twenty-two, beans and potatoe flour in one only,—that in ten cases the adulteration consisted of a single article, in twelve of two, and in ten of three substances,—that in many instances the quality of coffee present was very small, and in others not more than a fifth, fourth, third, half and so on. Chicory is in every respect inferior to coffee; but if its use be in any way desirable, it should be sold openly, and not as at present, under the names of Ceylon, Berbice, Costa Rica, Mocha Coffees, &c.

Refined Sugar.

An improved method of refining sugar consists in the adoption of the superphosphate of alumnia in conjunction with animal charcoal as a substitute for the albumen usually employed for that purpose. In both cases the object is to separate and carry down the various impurities which color and adulterate the pure saccharine principle present in the syrup expressed in cane. As, however, bullocks' blood is the material usually procured for the purpose of supplying the albumen, a portion of uncoagulated animal matter, together with certain salts, is left in the juice in the ordinary process of refining which impairs its purity and promotes its fermentation thus occasioning a certain loss of saccharine matter to result. Nothing of the kind happens when the superphosphate is substituted, and so much more perfect a purification of the feculent matter, under such circumstances, takes place, that several varieties of sugar, which, from being highly charged with feculent matters, are rejected in the ordinary process of refining, are readily purified by this method.

The employment of superphosphate of alumnia also gets rid of so much larger a proportion of the impurities present in the sugar, that much less animal charcoal is subsequently required for effecting its complete defecation than when bullocks' blood has been resorted to. The quantity of superphosphate necessary for effecting the object is, for ordinary sugars, not less then twelve ounces to the ton.

Children's Sayings.

A little one in accounting for the lateness of her appearance at the breakfast table, remarked that when she awoke she found herself asleep!

On another occasion, soon after putting on for the first time a pair of new shoes, of which she was very proud, her mother was talking to her about the angels in heaven.—She listened quite attentively, until her thoughts reverting to her new shoes, she suddenly exclaimed, Oh, mamma, do you suppose the angels wear ankle ties or gaiter boots!

Another little one, said the oddest thing in the way of children's talk. She came running into the house with the news that the old hen had a little chicken, and inquired who made it, mother? God made it, was the answer. Why! exclaimed the little querist, holding up her hands in wonderment, I should think he would have killed it, sticking the feathers into it!

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

ISAAC PITKINS. The arrest of this individual, on the charge of being the receiver of stolen property, has led to disclosures, which it is thought, will check for a time, at least, the numerous robberies which have been perpetrated of late, in and around Boston. Pitkins is a Jew by birth, and kept a furnishing store, at No. 3, Sudbury street, which it would seem, has been used as a general depot for the reception of stolen goods, particularly cloths and ready-made clothing, with auxiliary branches in this and other States, as secret places of deposit, to avoid detection. Messrs. McMullen & Co. merchant tailors, at West Randolph, who were severe sufferers, a few weeks since, by a bold and daring robbery, have traced their property to this man's premises, and are in a fair way, it is said, of recovering a large portion of what they lost. Even here, we are told, that lost articles have been identified among the miscellaneous assortment, with a good prospect, if the search is continued, of discovering more.

A BRAVE LAD. A small boy of about five years of age fell into the water, while playing upon some timber near the State Prison in Charlestown, and would have been drowned but for the timely aid rendered by an active lad of ten years of age, son of Mrs. George B. Nightingale, recently of this town, who ran to his assistance, plunged in and saved the boy's life.

For the Patriot.

The Bootmaker's Strike.

MR. EDITOR: I did not intend to take any farther notice of 'W.' but I wish to say one word about those "Agreements."

When they were brought before the Society, I objected to the wording of them, stating that they could be taken advantage of. Neither the Committee that reported them, nor the Society understood them in the sense that 'W.' does; and in reporting the conversations that took place in making the agreements, they satisfied the Society that no advantage was meant to be taken of the wording. One member in particular, who was most anxious for the settlement of the question, said that no person could be mean enough to take such advantage, that the substance was all that was necessary, and that both the Society, and the Bosses, knew what was meant. That member now knows that there is a person mean enough to take such advantage; and possibly he has had some experience lately in other matters that will teach him more caution in future. If 'W.' was the mouthpiece of Messrs. Marsh and B. Curtis, I might say more on this subject,—but why does not 'W.' explain matters on A. C. & Co.s' shop, which he works for? Is he forbid to touch it? It is well known that many men now in the Society opposed the putting E. Marsh & Co.s' and B. Curtis & Co. on strike; it is also known that those who are now "Scabbing" on the other shops, voted in a body to do so, and voted down every effort which was made to postpone the question. Some of them have since boasted of that act, as showing their generalship in embarrassing the Society. But what excuse is it for 'W.' and his compeers, if those shops were not done right by? He can make that no excuse for A. C. & Co.s' shop, and it is on that shop all the "Scabs" work.

The assertion that all the good men but five or six, are in, is as true as all the rest of his statements; several of the men who are out, are going under instructions to those "GOOD WORKMEN," to learn how to spoil leather!

On the personal matters in his communication, I must own up beat. If anything 'W.' says, can have weight in Quincy, I am content. 'W.' was too long a student in the large stone school house at Dedham, for me to have any chance with him in a contest of that kind. I suppose the reason he is so partial to his Boss, is this; the Boss wishes he should be allowed a longer time in school to finish his education, and refused to do anything to bring him out; the men subscribed among themselves, and made up the amount necessary to take him from school. He is now repaying them. There is also a reason of his dislike to the "Grocer" he mentions. In his haste to leave town on his last trip, he left a small bill for groceries unpaid, which the "Grocer" had to pay; and he is vexed that he has not had the opportunity to pay him since his return. 'W.' is a worthy champion of a worthy cause.

Boston Correspondence.

A trip to New Hampshire continued.—Newport. — Business appearance. — Editorial matters — Unity Springs.— Route to Claremont and Bellows Falls, Vermont.

Bradford is a somewhat flourishing town, by reason of the railroads which terminates there, and probably never will go any farther towards Claremont for which it obtained a charter. The town of Bradford is situated about mid-way between the Merrimack and Connecticut rivers — it joins Hillsborough, the birth place of ex-President Pierce. It is hilly as about all the places in New Hampshire are. A portion of the town lies in a valley three miles wide. Soil evidently light, loomy and Lard of cultivation. In one thing it resembles Quincy, it has valuable stone quarries.

Having left the cars we proceeded in a stage coach to Newport, an honest fourteen miles distance— should think them English miles. Our ride was anything but comfortable. There was ten of us nicely packed inside,and quite a number perched themselves on the top of the carriage. The weather continued rainy, and at times we were visited with prolific showers. Those on the outside were drenched through, while the inside passengers endured much by reason of the closing of all avenues on the side of the coach to protect us from the watery element without. The horses walked most of the distance over a perfect succession of hills, or if you please, mountains and through valleys. The great fall of rain, caused the travelling to be difficult on the highways, now sandy, and anon muddy. About three hours were absorbed in reaching Newport, which we did not, until the mantle of evening overspread all around us.

We passed through the rough and hilly town of Newbury, a portion of which borders on Sunapee Lake, over nine miles in length. We had a good view of this romantic little sea, riding several miles near its shores. A steamboat has commenced plying on this lake the present season—more for recreation and pleasure than business. Its waters are over eight hundred feet higher than the Connecticut or Merrimack river. So that it may be called a mountain lake.

It was somewhere in this neighborhood we ascended the "height of land" where on one side the tributary streams flow into the Merrimack, and on the other side into the Connecticut river.

Newport is a pretty place, and the main village through which the Sugar river flows, is really handsome; and with its modern improvements in the buildings and stores, will compare favorably with many of our flourishing villages near Boston. It has long been noted for its manufacturing establishments, for its good soil, pleasant farms, good schools and excellent society.

Here is the home of the Hon. Edmund Burke, a distinguished politician of New Hampshire, and who has "done the State some service." He lives in a neat mansion on the village green, surrounded by the elite of Newport. Being the shire town of Sullivan county, it is the residence of quite a number of professional gentlemen.

The Sugar River bank is located in this town, and is well managed. The cashier, Paul J. Wheeler, Esq, is "every inch" a gentleman. The county buildings, built of brick, are neat and large enough for all practical purposes.

Two newspapers are printed in this pleasant town. The Argus and Spectator, and the Republican. Of course they are antipodes in politics. But the editors are gentlemen and conduct their weekly sheets with much talent. Their editorial batteries are brought to bear occasionally against each other, but, like lawyers out of court, are as good friends as ever when they meet. Why should the editorial corps be otherwise. All personal ill-feelings should be discarded in newspaper matters. For surely, every man has a right to think, speak and vote as he sees fit in matters of State. If conscious he is right, that right he should pursue, regardless which way the popular breeze blows.—But of all things neighbors and friends should never quarrel about politics or theology. A man's religious faith is a matter that concerns himself alone, and for whom he is accountable to none but his Maker. The right of free expression on governmental matters and of suffrage are secured to him by the organic laws of his country.

The second day of our sojourn at Newport, our kind and respected friends with whom we stopped as guests, took us in their carriage to Unity springs, distant of five miles, where we partook of the medicinal waters. They have some celebrity in curing diseases, and are highly impregnated with mineral substances, but are rather unpleasant to the taste.

After a most agreeable visit at Newport Village, with our friends who were unceasing in their attentions; we left by stage for Claremont, distant ten miles, and from thence took the cars on the Sullivan Railroad for Bellows Falls in Vermont. X.

Black Rock House.

We have had occasion to speak of this celebrated watering place before; but have been induced to extend our remarks, in consequence of an article which appeared in the Hingham Journal of August 6th; extracts from which we publish below:

"Of all the watering places that which possess, perhaps, the greatest natural advantages is to be found on what is called the Jerusalem road, running from Warwick's hotel to the village of Cohasset. On this road, between the houses once belonging to the two Nichols' families, beginning with that of Captain Nathaniel, and ending with that of Captain Aaron Nichols, runs a ledge of rocks about half a mile in extent, forming part of the dreaded Cohasset rocks, but usually called Nichols' Rocks. The choice spot on this long ledge is the little old one story weather-beaten mansion, formerly owned and occupied by Captain Nathaniel Nichols. The house was built by his father, and is supposed to be now about one hundred and fifty years old. Captain Nichols was once in command of a Revenue Cutter, and passed a large portion of his life upon the sea. He was one of the few, however, who escaped the usual fate of those who "go down to the sea in ships," and spent a long old age in this little cottage, built on a ledge of rocks so near the ocean that the waves dash over it when driven in by a heavy northeaster. Here he finally cast anchor and went without fear to settle his account with his owners.

"Old Captain Than was a good sailor and an honest man; he was always glad to see his friends, and opened his house for all who came to enjoy a day's fishing and a chowder such as could only be found at Nichols' Rocks. Small as the house is, it was always large enough to hold all who came, seeming to possess a sort of India Rubber quality, answering to the unbounded hospitality of the owners. The old gentleman was an ingenious mechanic as well as a good sailor. He made a clock with two faces, one looking into the parlor and the other into the kitchen, the weights and pendlum hanging down between the ceiling. In the same little parlor stood another venerable clock, sull to be seen, on the dial of which we read the following admomitory lines:

"I serve thee here with all my might,
To tell the hour by Day by Night,
Therefore example take by me
And serve thy God as I serve thee."

In the kitchen is still to be seen an old oaken chest, said to have come over in the Mayflower, and doubtless possessing a much better pedigree than three quarters of those venerable relics

"Mrs. Nichols survived her husband for many years, and, although totally blind, kept up while she lived the ancient customs of the house.

"Until the death of Mrs. Nichols, the old house was never opened as a public Inn, where might be found lodging for man and beast. Since then it has been opened to the public and known as the "Black Rock House." The present proprietor, Mr. J. W. Hayden, has dispensed the hospitalities of the place for the last ten years. He is fond of a good joke, with which he sometimes entertains his customers as well as with a profusion of the luxuries that come out of the sea. His quarters are somewhat limited, but he makes the most of them, and is quite sure that whoever may build larger houses, no one can secure a point between Boston and Cape Cod which commands a prospect so varied and so charming; which never tires the eye, but constantly reveals new beauties both of the sea and of the land. No new Hotel, strange to say, when we consider this unrivalled locality, has arisen to eclipse the ancient glories of the Old Nichols' House.

"On these rocks you have the advantage of pole-fishing, of which most of our watering places are destitute. About half a mile from the house lies Black Rock, famous for tautog and for gunning when the coots are flying. The sweetest fish we ever tasted was a tautog caught on Black Rock, brought immediately in, cut open on the back like a mackerel, broiled in Mrs. Nichols' kitchen, and then eaten with a layer of sweet butter spread over it. Those who wish to eat tautog have now a recipe, and if they try it they will never wish to see one cooked in any other way.

"The time to fish is soon after the tide begins to flow, and the manner of fishing is to let the bait lie on the bottom until it is seized by the fish. Its habits are peculiar, sometimes a number will be found in one place or hole, out of which you may take every one, and that will be the end of your day's fishing. This fish is a native of New York, but have increased very abundantly in our waters of late years.

"Nichols' Rock was a watering place long before Nahant or Nantasket had been thought of for such a purpose. On these rocks and in this venerable mansion have assembled more than three generations to enjoy a day in fishing and innocent amusement. The delights of Nichols' Rocks have been handed down by faithful tradition from mother to daughter and from father to son. Long may the old house stand with doors open to all comers. Lightly may the storms beat upon its decaying timbers and its weakened joints. Far distant be the day when this cherished memorial of other and happy days shall have passed away like the worthy old couple that once inhabited it."

Mr. Hayden has also a new and fast-sailing Yacht for fishing parties, and keeps always on hand small boats, lines, bait, and competent boatmen, both for fishing and gunning.

The recent discovery of Smelt Fishing in the immediate vicinity of his house, enables him to furnish a sport rarely to be found in midsummer. For this fishing, fresh Shrimp bait is kept constantly on hand.

A Washington (D. C.) clergyman, while stating a deficiency in the collections, remarked, that since the issue of three cent pieces, the revenue of his church has decreased nearly one half.

A gentleman of Newburyport, (Mass.) has something like one hundred toads which he keeps in his garden to destroy insects. He has a house built for them, keeping them as he would chickens, and they are so tame that they will come at his call.

The Mormons.

Horace Greeley's visit to the Mormons.—Interview with Brigham Young.—Interesting Conversation.—Social condition of that peculiar people, etc.

Horace Greeley, Esq., of the New York Tribune, has recently paid a visit to the Mormons, at Utah, and communicated his observations to the press, from which we extract the following:

Mr. G. represents the affairs of the Society in as prosperous a condition as could be expected under the circumstances; that he found the Elder, a hale, hearty old man, about fifty-seven years of age; open and frank in his converse with strangers—"seeming to enjoy life and in no hurry to get to heaven." In regard to certain questions propounded, touching the peculiar institutions of the Society, his answers were free, without the least reserve, — frankly admitting, that they held to the infallibility of their church, believing all others to be schismatic and heretical; of their belief in Christianity as revealed in the Old and New Testaments and the Book of Mormons; in the doctrine of the Trinity—but not in the spirit of the Orthodox creed; In a personal devil, and eternal punishment; of the gathering together of God's people—and that now is the time and this the place for the consummation; in regard to the institution of slavery, he considered it a divine institution, not to be abolished until the curse pronounced against Ham shall have been removed from his descendants; notwithstanding the Territorial laws uphold the system, still he thought, when the time comes for Utah to be admitted into the Union, she will come in free—for he observed, it is a curse to the master—I myself hire many laborers, and pay them fair wages. I could not afford to own them. I can do better than subject myself to an obligation to feed and clothe their families, to provide and care for them in sickness and health. Utah is not adapted to slave labor. The revenue of the church he said, was collected by a voluntary tax levied upon all property, in proportion to one tenth of all a man possesses, which is disposed of in building temples and other places of worship, part to helping the poor and needy converts on their way to this country, and the largest portion to the support of the poor among the Saints; not a penny being appropriated to either bishop, elder, deacon or other functionary of the church, as a compensation for their services,—they are required to work for a living like the rest of the people; this he gravely asserts, notwithstanding he has accumulated a fortune of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The aversion and hatred with which the Mormons are regarded by those among whom they have lived, he thinks arises from a natural prejudice against new sects. As it respects the Danites or Destroying Angels of the Church, he denied there ever being such an organization. To the grave question of a plurality of wives, and was the system acceptable to a majority of the women? his answer was, I do not know, they could not have been more averse to it than I was, when first revealed to us as the Divine will; I think they generally accept it as I do, as the will of God; polygamy he seemed to think was not so common among them as generally supposed; some of the heads of the church have but one wife; others, it was true, had more; this they determined to suit their own individual duty. for himself, he had fifteen—he knew of none that had more; but some of those sealed to him were old ladies, whom he regarded rather as mothers than wives, but whom he had taken home to cherish and support. The Sabbath he enjoined to be observed as a day of rest and in a religious manner.

The impression left on Mr. Greeley's mind was favorable as to the general good character of the people; he represents them as a plain set of men; evidently born and reared to a life of labor, and looking as little like crafty hypocrites and swindlers as any men he ever met. Of the women he saw but little.

Upon the first day of the present year there were only two hundred and seven survivors of the Revolutionary pensioners. The ages of some of these soldiers are stated at over an hundred years.

It is a fact, apparently not generally known that there are thirty-two bones, and neither more nor less, in all the divisions of the human body. Thus, there are thirty-two teeth, thirty-two spinal junctions, and so on.

Hall's Journal of Health says that tartar on the teeth is the product of a living insect upon which neither vinegar nor tobacco-juice has any effect, but which is instantly destroyed by soap-suds.

Quincy, July 23. tf

Scrofula, or King's Evil,

is a constitutional disease, a corruption of the blood, by which this fluid becomes vitiated, weak, and poor. Being in the circulation, it pervades the whole body, and may burst out in disease on any part of it. No organ is free from its attacks, nor is there one which it may not destroy. The scrofulous taint is variously caused by mercurial disease, low living, disordered or unhealthy food, impure air, filth and filthy habits, the depressing vices, and, above all, by the venereal infection. Whatever be its origin, it is hereditary in the constitution, descending "from parents to children unto the third and fourth generation;" indeed, it seems to be the rod of Him who says, "I will visit the iniquities of the fathers upon their children."

Its effects commence by deposition from the blood of corrupt or ulcerous matter, which, in the lungs, liver, and internal organs, is termed tubercles; in the glands, swellings; and on the surface, eruptions or sores. This foul corruption, which genders in the blood, depresses the energies of life, so that scrofulous constitutions not only suffer from scrofulous complaints, but they have far less power to withstand the attacks of other diseases; consequently, vast numbers perish by disorders which, although not scrofulous in their nature, are still rendered fatal by this taint in the system. Most of the consumption which decimates the human family has its origin directly in this scrofulous contamination; and many destructive diseases of the liver, kidneys, brain, and, indeed, of all the organs, arise from or are aggravated by the same cause.

One quarter of all our people are scrofulous; their persons are invaded by this lurking infection, and their health is undermined by it. To cleanse it from the system we must renovate the blood by an alterative medicine, and invigorate it by healthy food and exercise. Such a medicine we supply in

Compound Extract of Sarsaparilla,

the most effectual remedy which the medical skill of our times can devise for this every where prevailing and fatal malady. It is combined from the most active remedials that have been discovered for the expurgation of this foul disorder from the blood, and the rescue of the system from its destructive consequences. Hence it should be employed for the cure of not only scrofula, but also those other affections which arise from it, such as ERUPTIVE and SKIN DISEASES, ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, ROSE, or ERYSIPELAS, PIMPLES, PUSTULES, BLOTCHES, BLAINS and BOILS, TUMORS, TETTER and SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, RINGWORM, RHEUMATISM, SYPHILITIC and MERCURIAL DISEASES, DROPSY, DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, and, indeed, ALL COMPLAINTS ARISING FROM VITIATED OR IMPURE BLOOD. The popular belief in "impurity of the blood" is founded in truth, for scrofula is a degeneration of the blood. The particular purpose and virtue of this Sarsaparilla is to purify and regenerate this vital fluid, without which sound health is impossible in contaminated constitutions.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR ALL THE PURPOSES OF A FAMILY PHYSIC,

are so composed that disease within the range of their action can rarely withstand or evade them Their penetrating properties search, and cleanse, and invigorate every portion of the human organism, correcting its diseased action, and restoring its healthy vitalities. As a consequence of these properties, the invalid who is bowed down with pain or physical debility is astonished to find his health or energy restored by a remedy at once so simple and inviting.

Not only do they cure the every-day complaints of every body, but also many formidable and dangerous diseases. The agent below named is pleased to furnish gratis my American Almanac, containing certificates of their cures and directions for their use in the following complaints: Costiveness, Heartburn, Headache arising from disordered Stomach, Nausea, Indigestion, Pain in and Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, Jaundice, and other kindred complaints, arising from a low state of the body or obstruction of its functions.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

FOR THE RAPID CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Hoarseness, Croup, Bronchitis, Incipient Consumption, and for the relief of Consumptive Patients in advanced stages of the disease.

So wide is the field of its usefulness and so numerous are the cases of its cures, that almost every section of country abounds in persons publicly known, who have been restored from alarming and even desperate diseases of the lungs by its use. When once tried, its superiority over every other medicine of its kind is too apparent to escape observation, and where its virtues are known, the public no longer hesitate what antidote to employ for the distressing and dangerous affections of the pulmonary organs that are incident to our climate. While many inferior remedies thrust upon the community have failed and been discarded, this has gained friends by every trial, conferred benefits on the afflicted they can never forget, and produced cures too numerous and too remarkable to be forgotten.

Poetry.

For the Patriot.

Napoleon.

From brave sunny France to Italia's fair land,
Napoleon his legions led on,
And join'd with Sardinia's brave patriot band,
For freedom the victory won.
Confed'rate Italia Rome's bishop their chief
Will bow to oppression no more—
The jewel is torn from the Austrian thief—
The rule of the despot is o'er.
Then swell the loud chorus France-Italy join
Columbia unite in the strain;
The tyrant his victim is forc'd to resign,
And liberty triumphs again.
And still may she triumph on each battle field,
Her soldiers the noble and brave,
Until the last despot, his sceptre shall yield,
And Earth know no tyrant or slave.

F. M. A.

A Sabbath Evening Song.

God on earth ! and God in heaven !
God ! who gave one day in seven
Unto man, that he might rest
With thy mercy in his breast;
God of Goodness ! I am kneeling,
In my spirit's deep revealing,
Fervently to give thee praise,
For the peace of Sabbath days.
Glad and tranquil thou has made
This soft hour of twilight shade,
And I ask thee, in thy might,
To be watchman of my night !

Let me thank thee, let me own,
At the footstool of thy throne,
All my grateful joy and love,
Drawn from hopes that point above.
Let me lay my heart before thee
And with holy trust implore thee
To forgive its human blot,
Gathered in its human lot.
Listen, Father ! to my singing,
Like a child to thee I'm clinging;
If I wander, guide me right,
Be thou watchman of my night !

Let me ask thee ere I sleep,
To remember those who weep,
Those who mourn with sone wild sorrow,
That shall dread to meet the morrow;
Let me ask thee to abide
At the fainting sick one's side,
Where the plants of anguish rise
In smothered groans and weary sighs;
Give them strength to brook and bear
Trial pain and trial care;
Let them see thy saving light,
Be thou watchman of their night !

God of all ! thou knowest well,
Myriads of thy children dwell
Here among us, lone and blind,
In the midnight of the mind;
Well thou knowest how they need
Words to teach and hand to lead,
Well thou knowest that they sin
For the want of light within.
They grope and fall, and men refuse
To raise them up and bind the bruise;
But thou, oh God ! in judgment's might,
Be thou watchman of their night !

God of mercy ! God of grace !
Keep me worthy of my place;
Let my harp strings ne'er be heard
When they jar with thy plain word;
Should the world's fan prfall take me,
Father ! do not thou forsake me;
Let repentance cleanse the stain,
And call me back to truth again;
Father ! Infinite and Just !
Shine upon my path of dust,
Lead me in the noontide light,
And be thou watchman of my night !

There's a Charm.

There's a charm too often wanted,
There's a power not understood,—
Seeds spring upwards as they're planted,
Or for evil, or for good !
We forget that charm beguiling,
Which the voice of sorrow drowns;
Smiles can oft elicit smiling,
Frowning can engender frown !

There's a temper quick in sowing
Care, and grief, and discontent;
Ever first and fast in showing
More in words than language meant;
Ever restless in its nature,
Until sorrows set their seal
On each pale and fretful feature,
And the hidden depths reveal.

If a smile engender smiling,
If a frown produce a frown,
If our lip—the truth defiling—
Can the rose of life cast down:
Let us learn, ere grief has bound us,
Useless anger to forego;
And bring smiles, like flowers, around us,
From which others' smiles may grow.

Anecdotes.

Two countrymen went into a hatter's to buy a hat. They were delighted with a sample, inside of the crown of which was inserted a looking-glass.

What is the glass for ? said one of them.

The other, impatient at such a display of rural ignorance, exclaimed :

What for ? why, for the man who buys the hat to see how it fits him, you stupid.

Bubby, why don't you go home and have your mother sew up the hole in your trowsers?

Oh, go along, old woman, our folks are economizing, and a hole will last longer than a patch.

Jemmy, my boy, did you see the flight of the bats the other evening ?

Niver the one, my honey ; what kind of bats were they ?

Brickbats, ye spalpeen.

An editor of one of the western papers, soon after he went to learn the printing business, went to see a minister's daughter ; and on the following Sabbath he was considerably astonished at hearing the lady's father announce as his text, "My daughter is grievously tormented with a devil."

The Mysterious Deaths at Castellan

FROM THE RECORDS OF A FRENCH DETEC

I had some renown as a successful r catcher ; and I had some experience My field of operations, as a usual thing within the confines of the Department of Lower Alps ; and though I served under Sub-Prefect of the Third Arrondisem yet the Prefect of the Department called me when he chose. One morning I rece a note from the Prefect, ordering me to Digne, and see him with all possible patch. The missive came through the offi our Sub-Prefect, so I had nothing to do bu ready and start. I took an early dinner sumed the dress of a peasant ; browned face and hands, and set forth. I rea Digne just at nightfall, and as soon as i dark, I waited upon the Prefect. He see to be relieved when he saw me, and too to his private closet.

Now, said I, have you got work for m

Yes, he replied. Sit down and listen.

We sat down, and having tasted a gl wine, he proceeded :

Within a few months past, there have some of the most mysterious murders mitted in this Department, and in the partment of Var, that have ever come my notice. They are done, mostly road from Castellane to Aups. The first tim was a Marseilles merchant, who come up to Castellane to purchase pres fruits. The Prefect told me that they had.

And I suppose they must have put some inn, there ? I remarked.

Yes, said the Prefect.

I then supposed that some of the land must be concerned. But my companio formed me that they had been nar watched, and that no shadow of evi rested against them.

But, said I, is there not some poison i matter ? Some innkeeper may administe potion, and then send an accomplice the victim,

No, returned the Prefect, with a sha the head. Experienced physicians have e ined the stomach of several of the dead but no trace of poison has been found. I mysterious affair. The Sub-Prefect has all he could, but without effect ; and no mean to give the whole thing into hands. The Mysterious Deaths at Castellane.

FROM THE RECORDS OF A FRENCH DETECTIVE

I had some renown as a successful rogue catcher; and I had some experience too. My field of operations, as a usual thing, lay within the confines of the Department of the Lower Alps; and though I served under the Sub-Prefect of the Third Arroondisement, yet the Prefect of the Department called upon me when he chose. One morning I received a note from the Prefect, ordering me to come to Digne, and see him with all possible dispatch. The missive came through the office of our Sub-Prefect, so I had nothing to do but get ready and start. I took an early dinner; assumed the dress of a peasant; browned my face and hands, and set forth. I reached Digne just at nightfall, and as soon as it was dark, I waited upon the Prefect. He seemed to be relieved when he saw me, and took me to his private closet.

Now, said I, have you got work for me?

Yes, he replied. Sit down and listen.

We sat down, and having tasted a glass of wine, he proceeded:

Within a few months past, there have been some of the most mysterious murders committed in this Department, and in the Department of Var, that have ever come under my notice. They are done, mostly on the road from Castellane to Aups. The first victim was a Marseilles merchant, who had come up to Castellane to purchase preserved fruits. His body was found by the roadside, near the line between the two Departments; and at first it was supposed that he must have fallen in a fit, as no marks of violence could be found upon him. His pockets had been rifled, however. The next one was found near Arnot, and under the same circumstances. He was a merchant, also, and from Nice. Since then, five or six more have died upon the road in the same mysterious way, and no marks of ill-usage have been found upon any of them; but they have all been robbed.

Have most of them stopped in Castellane? I asked.

The Prefect told me that they had.

And I suppose they must have put up at some inn, there? I remarked.

Yes, said the Prefect.

I then supposed that some of the landlords must be concerned. But my companion informed me that they had been narrowly watched, and that no shadow of evidence rested against them.

But, said I, is there not some poison in this matter? Some innkeeper may administer the potion, and then send an accomplice after the victim,

No, returned the Prefect, with a shake of the head. Experienced physicians have examined the stomach of several of the dead men, but no trace of poison has been found. It is a mysterious affair. The Sub-Prefect has done all he could, but without effect; and now we mean to give the whole thing into your hands. You must go to Castellane at once, and there you can get such further information as the Sub-Prefect can give you.

After conferring a while longer with the Prefect, he let me have a suit of ordinary tradesman's clothing, and thus habited, I went to a hotel and put up for the night. In the morning I procured a horse and set out, reaching Castellane before noon. During the day I pretended to be doing business. I went to the woollen factory and examined a lot of stuff, and also visited several places where preserved fruits were put up. I learned that most of the people who came there on business, stopped at an inn kept by a man named Juan Fontaix; so I left my horse there, and engaged lodgings.

After dark I called upon the Sub-Prefect. He told me that he had used all the means within his power, but had been able to gain no clue to the guilty party. Most of the murdered victims had been from Marseilles, and the excitement in the city was intense. Gendarmes had been sent out upon all the roads, and secret police had also been upon the watch. The last victim had fallen only four days before, and the deed was done only fifteen minutes after the police men had passed the spot.

I asked the Sub-Prefect, if he had any suspicions. He answered that all the suspicions he had held, was fastened upon Juan Fontaix, the innkeeper. Nearly all the murdered men had stopped at his house, and he must have known something of their business.

I bade the officer keep perfectly quiet, and not even to let any one of his own men know of my presence. Then I returned to the inn, and finally entered into a conversation with my host upon the subject of the mysterious deaths. He pronounced it wonderful, and assured me that it had injured him more than he could tell.

Parbleu! he muttered, they'll be suspecting me next, if they have not done so already!

I was soon satisfied that Juan Fontaix knew nothing of the guilty party. He was very fearful, and at times blanched and trembled at the thought of being apprehended for the crime. Most people would have seen in this, signs of guilt; but I thought differently.

I spent all the next day in the town, ostensibly engaged in business with the factories, but in reality hunting after some clue to the object of my mission. Night came again; but I had found nothing new. I was perfectly satisfied that the murderer had laid his plans so deeply that no circumstantial clue could be found. If I would find him, I must catch him with the proof upon him.

I had given an assumed name at the inn, and stated that I belonged to Toulon. On the next morning I called for my bill, and informed my host that I was off for home. Then I went to the fruit preserver's and told him the same, stating that I must confer with my partner before I concluded my bargain. After this I went to the woollen factory, and saw the business agent. His name was Louis Cazaubon, and he had come to Castellane about a year before. He seemed to be a straightforward, business man, and yet he was the only one I had seen whom I really wished to suspect. In conversing upon the murders, he had been a little too free and offhanded, treating the subject more cooly than a man with a heart would be apt to do. But still, I had, thus far, been able to find nothing against him. On the present occasion I told him, as I had told the others, that I must return to Toulon.

If you have not the ready money with you, we can give you credit, he said.

I told him I had plenty of money, but I was not fully prepared to pay the prices he had demanded. He said, very well; and added, that he should be happy to sell to me when I came again. I bade him good-day, and then departed. As soon as I was alone, I began to suspect Monsieur Louis Cazoubon in earnest. When I told him that I had money, but did not purchase because he charged me too much, why didn't he banter me? Simply because he wished me to leave town with my money in my pocket. At least, so it appeared to me. This was sufficient ground for me to work upon, and I resolved to watch the man a little while; so I rode to an out-of-the-way place, and left my horse, and then returned and concealed myself in a position where I could see the movements of Louis Cazaubon. In a few moments he came out from his factory and walked away. His step was hurried and eager. I felt sure that he was not the man who did the direct work of death. The plot was deeper than that, or he would have been discovered ere this. So I resolved to wait a while and see if he returned. I would have followed him, if I could have done so with safety; but he might have detected me, and that would not do. However, in less than fifteen minutes he came back. He walked now with a sober, innocent air. It seemed to say,—O, I havn't been up to any mischief, as you can see!

I saw Cazaubon at his desk again, and then returned to my horse. I knew that I had a risk to run now, but I was ready for it. If the factory agent was at the bottom of the crime, and meant to have me robbed, he had already set his machinery in motion, and the next development would be upon the road. I examined my pistols, and then left the town, taking the road along the river, towards Aups.

At the end of half an hour I came to the slopes of the Barjaois mountains and soon afterwards entered the wood. I now began to be very careful, and keep my eyes about me. I will not say that I was wholly without fear; for the mysterious manner in which the murders had been done, verged so closely upon the marvellous, that a sort of superstitious dread attached to it. Had the victims been shot, or run through with a sword, or had their throats cut, I should have felt no sort of dread. But this was new ground. Death had come here, nobody knew how. It might have come from an invisible hand, and in dead silence. Yet, when I reasoned upon the subject, I felt sure that the murderer must approach very near to his victim ere the blow was struck, since it must be some direct and powerful agent that could cause death in so strange a manner.

I had crossed the little cascade of Saint Esprit, and was descending a short, steep hill-side, when I saw a boy by the roadside, at the foot of the descent, engaged in whipping a mule. He was a slightly built fellow, not more than fifteen years of age, and his coarse garments were covered with meal. I knew that there was a mill upon a branch of the Vendon, not for back, and I supposed he might be the miller's boy. As I came nearer, I saw a large sack upon the ground, close by where the mule stood.

What's the matter, my boy? I asked as I drew up near him.

This ugly mule has thrown both me and my bag of corn from his back? the boy answered.

Are you hurt? I continued.

My left shoulder is hurt, he said, and I can't lift this sack again. If Monsieur would help me, I would be very grateful.

Until this moment, the idea of suspecting the boy had not entered my head; but the suspicion flashed upon me now. He was altogether too keen a looking fellow for a miller's apprentice. He gave me a glance from a pair of quick, sharp eyes, that meant more than he had spoken. And then, if I had not been very much mistaken, I had seen him holding his mule firmly with that left hand.

I leaped from my saddle and moved towards the boy, being careful to watch his every movement.

Now, said he, if you will take hold of that end, we will put it on. He lifted at the other end, and pretended that it hurt his shoulder; and begged of me to lift it on alone.

I professed to be willing to comply, and stooped down for that purpose, keeping my head in such a position that I could watch him by a sidelong glance. As I bent over and took hold of the sack, I saw him carry his hand to his bosom, and draw something out. I saw his dark eye flash, and heard his quick, eager breathing. In an instant, I seized his wrist, and bent it upward, and as I did so, I heard a sharp report, like the explosion of a percussion cap, and saw a tiny wreath of smoke curl up from the hand I held. He struggled to free himself from my grasp, but I held him with a grip of iron, and fastened my gaze upon him.

I have found you, have I? I said, drawing one of my pistols, and cocking it. I will simply inform you, that I am an officer of the Prefecture, and that I have been hunting for you. Just offer a particle more of resistance, and a bullet goes through your brain! Now give me that weapon.

The boy was frightened and trembled violently.

It is only a tobacco pipe, he said, as he handed it to me.

And certainly, it looked like nothing more; but I had seen enough of it to know that evil was in it. It appeared to me to be an ordinary meerschaum pipe, the bowl being colored as though by long use—only the amber mouth-piece was missing. I did not stop to examine it then, but turned my attention to its owner. I saw that he was still trembling with fear, and I knew that now would be the time to work upon him.

So you are selling your soul to Monsieur Louis Cazaubon? I remarked, by way of letting him know that I was thoroughly informed.

He started, and I saw very plainly that he knew just what I meant; but he tried to recover himself, and clumsily asserted that he did not know anything about the individual I had named.

You needn't lie to me, I sternly replied, for I know all about it. Louis Cazaubon has been watched by me when he didn't dream of such a thing. He thought I was a tradesman. But you are young and I would save you. Confess everything to me, and I promise you that your life shall be spared.

I saw that the boy wavered, and I followed up my advantage; and ere long I had him bent to my wishes. I made him understand that I held his life in my hands; that I could protect him from the vengeance of any one whom he might criminate; and that he had everything to gain and nothing to lose, by a full confession. He came to it gradually and reluctantly; but my wit finally triumphed and I gained the secret.

His name, he said, was Henry Dupin; he was born in Paris, but never knew who his parents were. He went to live with Cazaubon when quite young, and had been with him ever since. He said Cazaubon used to be a chemist, and did some business in that line; and that it was in Paris that he inventvented the infernal machine which they had since used with such fatal effect. About two years previous to the present time, they left Paris together, and spent nearly a year in travelling over the kingdom, murdering and robbing for a living. Finally they came to Castellane, where the master obtained his present situation, while the boy went into a mill close at hand. Cazaubon marked the victims that were to be robbed, and the boy then did the work. He used various artifices in carrying out his plan, but the usual one was the same that he had tried upon me.

The boy then explained to me the secret of the pipe. Only the outer surface was of meereschaum. Within it, was a pistol of the finest steel, and of the most exquisite workmanship. The stem was the barrel, and the lock was concealed within the bowl, and covered with tobacco. A thin plate of metal protected the curiously contrived lock, and upon this the tobacco rested. A pressure of the thumb or finger upon this plate discharged the weapon. In order to cock it, the plate had to be removed. And now comes the infernal feature of the contrivance. The powder used in the little barrel was Cazaubon's own manufacture, and very powerful. For a wad, a piece of felt was used, and on the top of this were placed the missile that did the mischief. The boy had two of them, stitched up in the lining of his coat. He took them out and showed them to me. This projectile was a tiny arrow, not larger than a cambric needle with one end sharp, and the other beat down to a thin feather. It was of fine steel, but coated with a greenish yellow substance, which was the most virulent and speedy poison that the chemist's art could concoct. That needle once within the course of the blood, and death was already at the heart. Its wound no mortal eye could detect. It punctured the skin not so palpably as the prick of a pin. He who sent it on its fatal errand made sure of his aim, generally striking the neck, and the victim would fall into insensibility ere he could comprehend what had hurt him.

I returned to Castellane with the boy; and having left him in charge of the Sub-Prefect, I took a gendarme along with me, and went to the factory. Monsieur Cazaubon was surprised to see me back so soon: but he was more surprised when I asked him to take a walk with me! and when I called in the gendarme, and bade him put on the handcuffs upon the agent, he was ready to sink to the floor. We had him secured before he had sense enough to resist, and he was conveyed to the office of the Sub-Prefect without trouble. At first, he denied everything; but when he found that this would not avail him, he swore he would kill the boy.

In due time, Monsieur Louis Cazaubon was tried and condemned to death; and the Prefect of Digne took possession of the infernal machine. Before the villian was executed, he confessed his crimes—told how many years he had worked to perfect his fatal instrument, and produce the poison; and also owned that the boy Henry had been driven to help him through fear of his life.

So the rascal was executed. Henry Dupin spent two years in confinement, and was then set free, and commenced an honest life. As for me, I got all the praise I deserved, and perhaps more.

The Judge in a Dilemma.

An awkward affair, which once occurred to one of the Judges on a Western Circuit, has been the subject of much mirth. It appears that the pious judicial, having finished his labors, and cast off his forensic wig at his lodgings, had retired into the next room to wait for his brother Judge, whom he was about to accompany to some of the local aristocracy to dinner. The female servant of the house had entered the bed chamber by a side door, and, not knowing the Judge was in the next room, in a frolic arrayed herself in the Judge's wig. Just at the moment when the fair Mopsy was admiring herself in a looking glass, the Judge unexpectedly entered the room, and poor Mopsy catching a sight of the stern countenance looking over her shoulder in the glass was so alarmed that she fainted, and would have fallen to the floor if the learned Judge, impelled by humanity, had not caught her in his arms. At this critical moment his brother Judge arrived, and opening the dressing room door, with a view of seeing if he was ready, discovered his learned brother with the fainting maid in his arms. Not wishing to interrupt what he thought to be an amour, he quickly attempted to withdraw, when his brother Judge vociferated—

For heaven's sake, stop and hear this matter explained.

Never mind, my dear brother, the matter explains itself, and he left his learned brother to recover the fainting maid as he could.

Manufacture of Carpets.

An examination of ordinary velvet carpets shows that the back, instead of presenting the same pattern as the front—which the ingrain does—is apparently a web of nothing but hemp. The process of making velvet carpets in this way is of comparatively new invention, and has contributed more than anything to the great reduction in the price of such fabrics. In these carpets, the wool is all worked upon the front, and the hempen threads thrown upon the back; hence they can be manufactured at a greater economy than Kidderminster carpets, in which, though they also have a velvet surface, the thread is carried from back to front, and from front to back. The latter description of fine carpets are necessarily made of fine wool, and consequently are much the softest, wear longer, and do not whiten in the seams; but, on the other hand, they cost considerably more, nor can they be made with so many colors, being woven on a Jacquard loom.

The finest European carpets are made at the Gobelins, Paris, to which the famous manufactory of the Savounneire has been transported. The royal Wilton carpets are also very beautiful. In these, the pile is raised higher than in the ordinary Wilton.—All Wilton, Kidderminster and velvet carpets have the pile cut. In the imperial Brussels the pile is raised above the ground, and the pile of the figure cut, but he ground is uncut. In the ordinary Brussels, the pile is left uncut, both in figure and ground. The costly rugs, exhibited at carpet stores, on which the figures are delineated almost as delicately as in a painting, and not woven; but the threads are laid horizontally, one by one, as straw in an ostler's cutting box, so that their ends form the pattern, and they are then pressed tightly and the surface shaved even.—Washington States.

Middle Life.

It is perhaps not without some shade of sadness that one comes to rank himself in middle life. Slowly it dawns upon him, reluctantly he admits it. It is no sense of growing old that teaches him, no flagging of the powers or the spirits, not even the taunt of that opprobrious epithet now a days flippantly flung at middle life—for the "fogy" is not the old, but the middle aged man; but one finds that, with the fuller flesh, and firmer muscle, and stronger tread, and truer poise of his faculties—while yet his sympathies are all young and fresh, while yet he waits to follow where the older and the wiser lead—the world about him waits and looks to him—pushes him forward where he hesitates, until he discovers, that no longer looked upon as young, he must take his place in the toiling and exposed van, and hew the way in which other steps shall tread.

The character of middle life is the character of the man. It is that by which he is known, that by which he makes his mark, that by which he does his good or evil; it is the character he carries with him into age and into the presence of his Maker. Middle life makes what God himself could not give. The bright visions of youth are past. Sorrows, disappointments, griefs, have overtaken us, and we are made to see how solemn and how real a thing it is to live, how vain and weak and ignorant is the unsupported soul of man. Amid trials and toils, the attendant witnesses of a Father's discipline and oversight, amid defeats which each day testify to our insufficient principle, our advancing years leads us. Shall all this pass us as the breeze passes the wheat-field, leaving it standing and smiling as before! Shall we not have gained some steadiness, some stateliness of character, some other reverence than for ourselves, some other dependence? Shall the old frivolity still cleave in us—the garb of childhood on the frame of man—the old love and pursuit of pleasure—the old, often-vanquished, self-confidence? Shall we be growing into years with all the frippery of childhood lingering about our hearts, our manners, our hopes, our attainments? Not so. Middle life is for better things; for the casting off of the childish and unworthy, and the putting on of the whole man—even of the man after Christ. Saddest of all sad sights it is to see the probation of a human soul wearing towards its noon, while no deepening tinge to character proclaims the ripening within, while all things say how closely and wilfully still it clings to its grosser and meaner delights. Old age is not of necessity beautiful. All do know the secret of the art of growing old gracefully. It is an art which middle life works at and perfects. The secret lies back there. Serene and waiting and beloved age is the result of honorable and virtuous middle life: and age, querulous exacting, burdensome to itself and others, is the product of selfish, frivolous middle life.

Our Children.

Our children are to fill our places in society—in Church and State, and the manner in which they will fill them depends upon the manner in which we educate them. If we train them up in the Sabbath-school, they will amply repay us for all our care; but if they are trained up for the world—in the streets—in the gambling and tippling saloon—in Sabbath breaking, profanity, licentiousness, and intemperance—in idleness—in sin, they will dishonor our names, and repay us by and by with a vengeance!

How fearful our responsibility! When we consider that our son may make a useful, happy and talented man, respected and beloved by all around him, or he may make a consummate villian, detested by the world as a nuisance and a curse, and that our daughter has a corresponding alternative before her—that in the history of both, in all probability, there is a crisis, or turning point, when it is uncertain which way they will preponderate—and that we necessarily play an important part in tipping the scale, we can but feel that this is a matter not to be trifled with, and that every means possible should be resorted to, in order to secure the right drift, and save those so dear to us. As we would have them honorably act their part upon the stage of life, so let us sedulously aim to qualify them for it.—Morning Star.

Clocks and Watches.

A watch differs from a clock in its having a vibrating pendulum—and, as in a clock, gravity is always pulling the pendulum down to the bottom of its arc, which is its natural place of rest, but does not fix it there, because the momentum acquired during its fall from one side carries it up to an equal height on the other—so in a watch, a spring, generally spiral, surrounding the axis of the balance wheel, is always pulling this towards a middle position of rest, but does not fix it there, because the momentum acquired during its approach to the middle position from either side carries it just as far past on the other side, and the spring has to begin its work again. The balance-wheel at each vibration allows one tooth of the adjoining wheel to pass, as the pendulum does in a clock; and the record of the beats is preserved by the wheel which follows. A main spring is used to keep up the motion of the watch, instead of the weight used in a clock; and as a spring acts equally well whatever be its position, a watch keeps time, although carried in the pocket; or in a moving ship. In winding up a watch, one turn of the axle on which the key is fixed is rendered equivolent, by the train of wheels, to about four hundred turns or beats of the balance wheel—and thus, the exertion, during a few seconds, of the hand which winds up, gives motion for twenty-four or thirty hours.

Eye Sight.

Milton's blindness was the result of overwork and dyspepsia.

One of the most eminent American divines, who has for some time been compelled to forego the pleasure of reading, has spent thousands of dollars in vain, and lost years of time, in consequence of getting up several hours before day and studying by artificial light. His eyes will never get well.

Multitudes of men and women have made their eyes weak for life, by the too free use of eyesight in reading small print, and doing fine sewing. In view of these things, it is well to observe the following rules in the use of the eyes:

Avoid all sudden changes between light and darkness.

Never begin to read, or write, or sew, for several minutes after coming from darkness to a bright light.

Never read by twilight, or moonlight, or on a very cloudy day.

Never read or sew directly in front of the light, or window, or door.

It is best to have the light fall from above, obliquely over the left shoulder.

Never sleep so that on first awaking the eyes shall open on the light of a window.

Do not use the eyesight by light so scant that it requires effort to discriminate.

Too much light creates a glare, and pains and confuses the sight. The moment you are sensible of an effort to distinguish, that moment cease and take a walk or ride.

As the sky is blue and the earth green, it would seem that the ceiling should be of a bluish tinge and the carpet green, and walls of some mellow tint.

The moment you are instinctively prompted to rub the eyes, that moment cease using them.

If the eyelids are glued together, on waking up, do not forcibly open them; but apply the saliva with the finger, it is the speediest dilutant in the world—then wash your eyes and face in warm water.—Hall's Journal of Health.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

FIRE. The alarm of fire yesterday noon, was occasioned by the burning of a stable at Railway Village, owned and occupied by George W. Seward, which was entirely consumed. When discovered, the flames were bursting through the roof. At the time of the accident, Mr. S. and family were absent at the Beach. The person who first effected an entrance, states, that the fire first communicated on the second floor; also, that the bell which was used last Sabbath, when resorted to on this occasion, to give the alarm, was found to be useless, the tongue having been removed; these two circumstances taken together, leads strongly to the conclusion that the fire was not accidental. The barn was connected with the house by a shed, which was partially destroyed. Providentially, the wind was blowing in a direction which carried the flames from the dwelling, otherwise, notwithstanding the exertions made the whole would have been one heap of ruins. The heat was very great, blistering the fruit on the trees some forty or fifty feet distant. Our Fire Companies were early on the spot, likewise those from Milton and Dorchester. The property was insured at an office in Dorchester we hear for five hundred dollars; loss estimated at twelve hundred.

LADIES' FAIR. The Fair which is to come off at Town Hall on Thursday next, promises to be an interesting and pleasant one. We have seen some of the articles which are to be on exhibition, and am sure they will well repay an examination. We have not space to go into details, but may be permitted to say, that those who have taken the matter in hand are making every preparation for an agreeable and sociable time. Their card in another column lifts the curtain in part upon the entertainment, but it must be seen in reality to be enjoyed in full.

POSTPONEMENT. The Democratic Caucus called for last Saturday evening, was, by the request of a number of the friends of the party, postponed to this evening, in order to give a more general notice to the call, that all may have an opportunity to take part in its deliberations. As business of importance--choosing delegates to the Convention to be held at Worcester, on the 15th instant, where candidates for State and County officers, to be supported at the approaching fall election, will be nominated, the wish is expressed that a general rally may be made.

THE MILITARY ENCAMPMENT AT CONCORD, is the engrossing subject among our young and chivalarous youth at the present time; it is the all-absorbing topic; nothing else is thought of, but camp fields, marches and counter-marches, plumes, epaulets, the clanging of arms, and the burning of gunpowder. Our only fear is, that their military enthusiasm will explode before the day arrives. No doubt it will be a brilliant affair. From five to six thousand men, we are told, will be under arms, besides any quantity of field and staff officers. Great preparations have been made for the occasion; fifteen hundred dollars has been appropriated for a police force, as one item; and a small army of surgeons are to be in attendance in case of accidents. The Fitchburg Railroad Company are calculating upon a great rush, and will run cars at short intervals, during each day. It will be an eventful epoch in our history; equal in importance to the far-famed "Battle of the Kegs." Speculation is rife; fortunes are to be made, and blasted reputations redeemed. Games of chance and other amusements, no doubt will be plenty, with the usual amount of dissipation and debauchery which ever attends such spectacles. Pickpockets and gamblers, who usually follow such exhibitions, are calculating to reap a rich harvest. The last day of the encampment, (Friday) it is thought will be the most interesting, on account of the number of visitors, and the review of the troops by his Excellency, the Commander-in-chief. He is to appear on a beautiful iron-gray, thirty-two years old—fresh from the wilds of Vermont—of enormous proportions—raising him to an elevation of six feet from the ground; (we give the description as it was furnished us.) Mr. Banks, it is said, is an excellent horseman; an adept with the sword, and to use a borrowed expression, "every inch a soldier." What a vast fund of military lore, has been lost to the world, by being so long hid under a bushel.

OUR FARM. We don't wish to cackle over our good fortune, but we must say, without fear of contradiction, that we have in our Aviary, one of the most self-sacrificing, devoted, and exemplary barn-fowls, that ever perched on a roost, or in concert with old Chanticleer, broke the stillness of the morning with his clarion notes. In domestic affairs, she is an active busy little body; in this respect, her virtues are above all praise.—During the present season, she has brought up a family of thirteen—without a single mishap—from the smallest atoms of animated nature to perfect Biddyhood. The day on which she threw up her maternal duties, was an eventful one—the poor discarded orphans, or which soon were to be—with scarcely clothing to cover their nakedness, seemed to feel that something in which they had a deep interest was about to take place: the kind, indulgent mother of yesterday, had suddenly changed into coldness and unnatural indifference. Their fears were too well-founded; after the morning's meal, one by one they were called up, to receive, no doubt, a mother's parting blessing, and to hear the sad ordeal, that now they must go forth and learn to scratch and pick for themselves; unwelcome as the intelligence was, they have, notwithstanding, been obedient to her wishes—not having given the old lady one moment's trouble from that day to this. In her widowhood, she appears to court quietude and repose. She is now seldom heard, except in her morning's carol,—intimating as plain as language can express it—there Mistress G., I have not forgotten you—you will find in my pleasant little silli groom, which your kindness has furnished me, a token of my gratitude, that is charming in an omelet, and excellent to flavor and enrich your cake.

PRINTER'S CEMETERY. The printers of Boston and vicinity have selected a site for a burial place, at that romantic spot, known as the Mount Hope Cemetery, in Roxbury. The Society have long felt the want of such a place, in consequence of the number of poor and friendless members which have from time to time been thrown upon their charity, requiring the rites of sepulture. It is a popular measure with the craft, a number of the employers subscribing very liberally towards the undertaking. Heaven must smile upon so benevolent an object. And it will receive the hearty good-wishes of every friend of humanity.

THE NEW YORK WEEKLY. An able and well-conducted weekly journal, published at the city of New York. We have long enjoyed its acquaintanceship, with profit and pleasure, and have not been indifferent observers of its growing worth and merits. We therefore, have no hesitancy in recommending it to public favor, as one of the best family papers extant, for the parlor, workshop or counting-room; a suitable companion for all occupations of life. The proprietors have ever been emulous to secure the most eminent writers and artists; and the chaste and instructive tales of fiction, morals essays, etc., adapted to all classes, and its rich embellishments, found within its ample folds, is evidence of their success, and what genius and talent may accomplish when directed by the hand of skill. For terms, and a fuller description of the general outlines of its character, see advertisement in another column.

☞ From our own knowledge we can positively assure our readers that it will be for their advantage, to note carefully and remember the substance of the advertisement of our friends, C. Gill & Co., in this issue of our paper.

CAMP MASSACHUSETTS. A beautifully engraved and correctly drawn map of the camp will appear in the BOSTON SATURDAY EVENING GAZETTE of this week. It will show the location of the Divisions, Brigades, Regiments and Battalions. The GAZETTE will also contain a complete Roster of the Commissioned Officers of the three Divisions of the Massachusetts Volunteer Militia. Both of these features will appear in the 1st Edition.

The Gazette will appear in an entire new suit of type this week.

☞ The Rev. Mr. Burnette, of Arkansas, will preach in the Episcopal Church to-morrow.

☞ The Sunday News says: We have tested this preparation, 'My Mother's Salve,' and speak from a knowledge of its medical healing virtues, and recommend its use in every family. See advertisement.

TO THE SICK Sufferers from Scrofula and Scrofulous affections, clean up! Why wear your pimples, blotches, ulcers, sores? Why have the life twisted out of by dyspepsia, rheumatism and gout? Why suffer syphilitic and mercurial diseases to the bones in your body, or the flesh off your bones? Why let your sluggish blood drag, and scatter its distempers through your veins? AYER'S Comp. Ext of Sarsaparilla cures these complaints, and cleanses them out of the system. Use it faithfully and you bring to society a healthier, cleanlier, and far more acceptable member.—Democrat, Baltimore, Md.

THE NAHANT STEAMER. We took passage a few weeks since in the Steamer Nelly Baker, from Boston to Nahant, and were highly pleased with our trip. The Nelly is a prim little boat, and sits on the water like a duck. Neatness and order, were every where observable, and every comfort and pleasure which good taste could dictate was to be found. Captain Calden is an old seadog; he has boxed the compass in almost every latitude—and has ever an eye to the leeward for the comfort and happiness of those who may put themselves under his protection. His Clerk, also, Mr. Maudant, we found very courteous and friendly, to whom we are indebted for many favors. In an angle of the boat, distant from the crowd, we were not a little surprised to recognize our old acquaintance, M. P. Wild, in a neat little refectory, loaded with cakes and confectionary, and cooling beverages, which he was dispensing in his usual bland and affable manner, to the hungry and thirsty passengers. The welcome smile with which he received us, reminded us of other times. Mr. W. is an indispensable personage in such an outfit—they can no more do without him, than the mariner can without his compass. He has our best wishes for a future successful career. Those who may be seeking either health or amusement, we advise to secure a birth in the Nelly Baker for Nahant; there they can breathe the pure refreshing sea-breeze; luxuriate in the matchless beauties of the place, and witness the silent grandeur of the boundless deep.

For the Patriot.

A new Political Party.

We see by many of the public journals in this State a call for a Convention to be held at Fitchburg, September 20th. In this request, nothing is said about the old parties; Democrats, Americans, Republicans, or Sinners; hence, we infer, it is for the purpose of organizing a new party. We judge from this notice, that their resolutions and platform will embrace all theological questions having a tendency to reform—all the political evils and sins of the times. Not having been informed what name this party is to be christened—but should say, as they are morally and religiously inclined, and thoroughly opposed to sin and corruption, that it will be a convocation of "All Saints" — and their motto—"PERFECTION."

Boston Correspondence.

Boston, Sept. 1, 1859.

Dulness of Business. — Prospects ahead — State Encampment at Concord. — Active preparations — Meeting of the Legislature. The Committee attacked on the Revised Statutes. — Gubernatorial matters — Governor Banks. Hon. B. F. Butler. — State Conventions near.

The summer has closed, leaving behind, the recollection of as inanimate business season as the Bostonians have realized for many years. Real estate has depreciated in value. The prices of most commodities still have a downward tendency; navigable enterprize is at a low figure, and the prospect of Fall business operations are not encouraging. It is however admitted that our banking system is in a sound condition, and that soon, with the immense products, about to be harvested, foreign trade may turn in our favor, by an increase of exports, and a diminution of imports. At the present moment, the balance of trade is against us; this once rectified, with the exercise of more economy in living, may restore things and prevent another business crash, which is apprehended by many shrewd merchants as inevitable.

The theme of conversation now is, the great muster at Concord next week. It will be the first, and probably last, State Encampment of the three great divisions of Massachusetts Voluntary Militia, that ever was or ever will be held within the borders of our Commonwealth. About all of next week will be used up in military matters. The great enterprise originated with our worthy Governor; from which, like every thing he undertakes, he will acquire additional laurels. Should no serious accident mar the three days encampment, it will form a permanent epoch in the military annals of the State. Every human precaution has been taken to preserve order with the outsiders on the training field. Quite a posse of the Boston Police, as well as officers from New York, Philadelphia and other cities, have been engaged, and will be on hand during the whole encampment, under the direction of Deputy Chief, L. A. Ham, of this city. The military review will be most gorgeous, and will repay the travelers visit from any part of Massachusetts to Concord.

The State Legislature meets by adjournment next week, which will give a lively turn to matters in our city. The members will probably visit "Camp Massachusetts" in a body. This will give an additional interest to the sights and wonders at old Concord. As the Legislature meets to revise the whole Statutes of the Commonwealth they will probably tarry some sixty days or more at the State House. They have a great work before them and it should be done well.

The Atlas and Bee of Monday is out in a denunciatory article against the doing of the Committee who have been sitting the summer past for revision of the statutes. The language is very severe on the Committee, denouncing them not only as generally unfit for the duty, but transcending all their powers. Coming as it does from the organ of the State Administration, the attack is somewhat remarkable, and foreshadows a disturbance of harmony in the Republican party. The Journal of yesterday, in defending the course of the Committee, admits they have made some serious mistakes.

The great Conventions for nominating State officers are to assemble in a few days. There is no apparent opposition in the ranks of the Republicans to the re-nomination of Governor Banks, who will be again elected by a large majority; of course carrying with him the State Republican Ticket. Aside from his party he will receive a large vote from other parties in the State. As Governor of Massachusetts he has more than answered expectations, and stands before its citizens one of the most popular men of the State; his election is a fixed fact.

The Hon Benjamin F. Butler, of Lowell, is to receive the Democratic nomination for Governor and will poll the full vote of his party. He possesses a high order of talents, is an upright man, and more liberal in his views on national politics, than many of his party. He is in favor of a tariff that will encourage and protect American industry, although this will have but little bearing in State matters. I believe it is conceded his views are congenial with Judge Douglas, on the slavery question. The Traveller thinks he will receive fifty thousand votes in November for Governor, being the strongest standard bearer the Democrats could put in nomition. x.

Our Circulation and Prospects

The NEW YORK WEEKLY has gone up to a circulation which places it second in point of circulation in the list of publications of the day. There is but one weekly publication in the world having a larger circulation than the WEEKLY. The indications are, at present, that the circulation of the WEEKLY will soon reach half a million.—Where the newsmen were taking tens, they are now taking hundreds of copies. This is the general effect among the Five Thousand News Agents who are now selling the NEW YORK WEEKLY, while from nearly every Post Office in the country, we are daily getting subscriptions and orders for specimens.

How and where to get the Weekly.

Wherever there is a News Agent, get the paper from him. By so doing you do not run the risk of losing your money through the Post Office, or having to pay for what you will never get. If the paper you are buying from the Agent stops, you do not lose advance subscriptions, sent to a place where you have no means of looking after it. We trust the day is not far distant when every town, large enough to sustain a Post Office, will have its News Agency.

OUR TERMS.

The price of the NEW YORK WEELY is FOUR CENTS, but where Agents have to pay extra freight or postage, a higher price is necessarily charged. When sent by mail, the price will invariably be $2 a year, in advance. Subscriptions taken for three months. Two copies will be sent for one year for $3, four copies for $6, eight copies for $12. Postmasters and others who get up clubs of ten, and send us $15 at one time, will be entitled to an extra copy for their trouble. The bills of all solvent banks taken at par for subscriptions. Canada subscribers must send twenty-five cents extra with every subscription, to pre-pay the American postage.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

A compound remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Para Sarsaparilla, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from Strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proved by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found of the following complaints:—

SCROFULA AND SCROFULOUS COMPAINTS, ERUPTIONS AND ERUPTIVE DISEASES, ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES, TUMORS, SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, SYPHILIS AND SYPHILITIC AFFECTIONS, MERCURIAL DISEASE, DROPSY, NEURALGIA OR TIC DOLOUREUX, DEBILITY, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, ERYSIPELAS, ROSE OR ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, and indeed the whole class of complaints arising from IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD.

This compound will be found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the foul humors which fester in the blood at that season of the year. By the timely expulsion of them many rankling disorders are nipped in the bud. Multitudes can, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerous sores, through which the system will strive to rid itself of corruptions, if not assisted to do this through the natural channels of the body by an alterative medicine. Cleanse out the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, or sores; cleanse it when you find it is obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Even where no particular disorder is felt, people enjoy better health, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. Keep the blood healthy, and all is well; but with this pabulum of life disordered, there can be no lasting health. Sooner or later something must go wrong, and the great machinery of life is disordered or overthrown.

Sarsaparilla has, and deserves much, the reputation, of accomplishing these ends. But the world has been egregiously deceived by preparations of it, partly because the drug alone has not all the virtue that is claimed for it, but more because many preparations, pretending to be concentrated extracts of it, contain but little of the virtue of Sarsaparilla, or any thing else.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter and painful disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself is justly despised, and has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound Sarsaparilla, and intend to supply such a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. And we think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. In order to secure their complete eradication from the system, the remedy should be judiciously taken according to directions on the bottle.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

has won for itself such a renown for the cure of every variety of Throat and Lung Complaint, that it is entirely unnecessary for us to recount the evidence of its virtues, wherever it has been employed. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

Poetry.

Flowers.

They spring unnoticed and unknown,
'Mid rocky wilds they bloom,
They flourish 'mid the desert lone,
They deck the silent tomb;
They cheer the peasant's lowly cot,
Adorn the monarch's hall,
They fill each quiet, shady spot,
O, who could tell them all?

Some o'er the murm'ring streamlet fling
Their blossoms bright and fair,
And there in vernal beauty spring,
Fanned by the fragrant air;
Some, 'neath the ocean's rolling waves,
In silent grandeur grow,
Nor heed the storm which o'er them raves,
But still in beauty blow.

Some where the eagle builds her nest,
Where man has never trod,
Where e'en the chamois dare not rest,
Upon the crumbling sod;
Yes, there, e'en there; wild flowrets grow,
In richest dress arrayed,
And o'er the clamorous eaglets throw
Their light and graceful shade.

'Mid mountains of perpetual snow,
By icy circles bound,
Some, rendered doubly beautious, glow,
And deck the frozen ground;
And 'mid cold winter's angry storm
The snow-drop rears its head,
And shows its pure, unspotted form,
When other flowers have fled.

Some on the breezes of the night
Their grateful odors send;
While others, children of the light,
To-day their perfume lend;
Some bloom beneath the torrid zone,
'Neath India's sultry skies;
'Mid Iceland's mountains, chill and lone,
The forms of others rise.

The stately fern, the golden broom,
The lily, tall and fair—
All there in rich succession bloom,
And scent the summer air.
In secret dell, by murm'ring rill,
In gardens bright and gay,
Within the valley, on the hill,
Flowers cheer our toilsome way.

Flowers image forth the boundless love
God bears his children all,
Which ever droppeth from above
Upon the great and small.
Each blossom that adorns our path,
So joyful and so fair,
Is but a drop of love divine
That fell and flourished there!

Hymn.

When Jordan hushed his waters still,
And silence slept on Zion hill,—
When Salem's shepherds, through the night,
Watched o'er their flocks by starry light,—
Hark! from the midnight hills around,
A voice, of more than mortal sound,
In distant hallelujahs stole,
Wild murmuring on the raptured soul.
Then swift, to every startled eye,
New streams of glory gild the sky;
Heaven bursts her azure gates, to pour
Her spirits to the midnight hour.
On wheels of light, and wings of flame,
The glorious hosts of Zion came.
High heaven with sounds of triumph rung,
And thus they smote their harps and sung:

O Zion! lift thy raptured eye,
The long expected hour is nigh—
The joys of Nature rise again—
The Prince of Salem comes to reign!

See, Mercy, from her golden urn,
Pours a gild stream to them that mourn;
Behold, she binds, with tender care,
The bleeding bosom of despair.

He comes—He cheers the trembling heart—
Night and her spectres pale depart:
Again the day-star gilds the gloom—
Again the bowers of Eden bloom.

O Zion! lift thy raptured eye,
The long expected hour is nigh—
The joys of Nature rise again—
The Prince of Salem comes to reign!

Persevere.

Rugged toiler—son of labor—
Stoutly battling every day
For existence—thou can conquer,
Thou can triumph in the fray.
On life's changeful scene of action,
Though defeat may oft appear,
Thou can win the victor's laurels,
If thou will but persevere.

Anecdotes.

Bridget, have you dusted the parlor?

Yes, marm; I put on a bushel of sand, but it wouldn't stick to the walls at all, at all! The sofer and shairs and carpet look nicely, and sure an' you may believe thut! In the ould counthry there wasn't the likes o' me for twenty miles round for dusting coal-pits!

I wish, said a beautiful wife to her studious husband, I wish I was a book.

I wish you were an almanac, replied her lord, and then I would get a new one every year.

Just then the silk rustled.

At a recent country wedding, on the minister's asking the bride, Wilt thou have this man to be thy wedded husband? without waiting for the completion of the sentence, she replied, dropping a courtesy,

Yes, if you please, sir!

A son of Galen who was very angry when a joke was passed on physicians, once defended himself from railery by saying,

I defy any person whom I ever attended to accuse me of ignorance or neglect.

That you may do safely, replied a wag, for you know, doctor, dead men tell no tales.

Husband, I must have some change to-day.

Well, stay at home and take care of the children—that will be change enough.

My son, I dislike your low ways.

Pray, father, would you have me turn highwayman?

Miscellaneous.

The Drunkard's Wife.

Harry, if this is the way you continue to come home night after night, I cannot bear it much longer—I will not bear it.

The man thus addressed lifted his heavy eyes as he asked, with a curse and a silly smile:

Well, what are you going to do about it?

I'm going to do something Henry, and that before long. I've tried to be a loving and faithful wife to you; I have striven to keep your home in order, and to welcome you here; but my spirits are breaking down. I shall have to give up soon.

Pho! don't you know you're going to reform me? Isn't it the duty of a wife to stay by her husband through good and evil?

Yes, where the evil does not come through yielding to vice, and debauching soul and body. If God sent you illness, or if, through your own miscalculation or heedlessness, you became suffering and poor, I would go with you, hand in hand, were the path ever so rugged, but as it is, you defiling what I loved, and yourself destroying every spark of affection that I ever possessed. I am too proud to perform menial offices for a drunkard, I freely confess. Were you a poor, wandering beggar, sick, and staggering, weakly to my door, I could wash your very feet, and willingly do what lay in my power to save you; but I cannot and will not bear you staggering drunkenly to your bed, sit up till the morning dawns, half-crazed with apprehension; seeing you in this or that danger, and do offices that are too revolting to be thought of. I was educated to habits of neatness and cleanliness; and when I married you, I thought I should go with one who would aid me in being pure; who would keep me from contact with anything gross and demolarizing. Instead of that, I married but a boy of man's stature, she added bitterly—with a weaker than child's mind—led by the nod of the drunkard and the dramseller, and respecting his wife so little that he dares to come reeling into her presence with words no wife should ever hear.

You're sick of me, then, eh? murmured the drunken man, drowsily.

I am sick of your ways, Henry, and have been for years. My better nature revolts against your blood-shot eyes, bloated face and fœtid breath. O! Harry, she cried passionately; we have been married ten years, and as I view that relation, we should be ten times happier, and love each other ten times more than when we first promised that which united our destinies; instead of that, I find myself wishing that I had never, never seen you.

You do, eh?

Yes, I do. I never said this before, but I am desperate. I have tried all means that my woman's ingenuity could invent to reform you. For years I never met you but with smiles—no matter what your condition. I thought surely my gentleness will reprove him, and in time reform him. When I remonstrated, it was not with anger—you can testify to that, and, O! Henry, how often you promised to reform. I even forgave you what woman seldom forgives, a blow, because you were not conscious, through drink, what you did. I was patient after some of my furniture had been destroyed, by your hand. I was patient after I laid two of my darlings under the sod, because their blood being poisoned by your vile habits, they had not the strength to rally when disease came. And even when your occasional sprees, as you call them, became weekly, nightly, I was patient, but that was the patience of despair. Now I have decided. I will no longer sit by a drunkard's hearthstone; and I declare to you it would be a happy hour to me to feel that

The Drunkard's Wife.

Harry, if this is the way you continue to come home night after night, I cannot bear it much longer—I will not bear it.

The man thus addressed lifted his heavy eyes as he asked, with a curse and a silly smile:

Well, what are you going to do about it?

I'm going to do something Henry, and that before long. I've tried to be a loving and faithful wife to you; I have striven to keep your home in order, and to welcome you here; but my spirits are breaking down. I shall have to give up soon.

Pho! don't you know you're going to reform me? Isn't it the duty of a wife to stay by her husband through good and evil?

Yes, where the evil does not come through yielding to vice, and debauching soul and body. If God sent you illness, or if, through your own miscalculation or heedlessness, you became suffering and poor, I would go with you, hand in hand, were the path ever so rugged, but as it is, you defiling what I loved, and yourself destroying every spark of affection that I ever possessed. I am too proud to perform menial offices for a drunkard, I freely confess. Were you a poor, wandering beggar, sick, and staggering, weakly to my door, I could wash your very feet, and willingly do what lay in my power to save you; but I cannot and will not bear you staggering drunkenly to your bed, sit up till the morning dawns, half-crazed with apprehension; seeing you in this or that danger, and do offices that are too revolting to be thought of. I was educated to habits of neatness and cleanliness; and when I married you, I thought I should go with one who would aid me in being pure; who would keep me from contact with anything gross and demoralizing. Instead of that, I married but a boy of man's stature, she added bitterly—with a weaker than child's mind—led by the nod of the drunkard and the dramseller, and respecting his wife so little that he dares to come reeling into her presence with words no wife should ever hear.

You're sick of me, then, eh? murmured the drunken man, drowsily.

I am sick of your ways, Henry, and have been for years. My better nature revolts against your blood-shot eyes, bloated face and fœtid breath. O! Harry, she cried passionately; we have been married ten years, and as I view that relation, we should be ten times happier, and love each other ten times more than when we first promised that which united our destinies; instead of that, I find myself wishing that I had never, never seen you.

You do, eh?

Yes, I do. I never said this before, but I am desperate. I have tried all means that my woman's ingenuity could invent to reform you. For years I never met you but with smiles—no matter what your condition. I thought surely my gentleness will reprove him, and in time reform him. When I remonstrated, it was not with anger—you can testify to that, and, O! Henry, how often you promised to reform. I even forgave you what woman seldom forgives, a blow, because you were not conscious, through drink, what you did. I was patient after some of my furniture had been destroyed by your hand. I was patient after I laid two of my darlings under the sod, because their blood being poisoned by your vile habits, they had not the strength to rally when disease came. And even when your occasional sprees, as you call them, became weekly, nightly, I was patient, but that was the patience of despair. Now I have decided. I will no longer sit by a drunkard's hearthstone; and I declare to you it would be a happy hour to me to feel that you had gone over that door-sill for the last time.

The woman's face was pale; pale as that of a corpse. It was evident that a passion; a deep, white-heart passion, had mastered her better mood. It glowed and flamed in her sunken eye; it trembled in her fingers, convulsively working; it swelled in her veins that stood out on the broad forehead, and incorded masses sprang from her delicate wrists.

The man was all this time looking down. He was very handsome, but his flesh was palid, his eyes as he raised them, lustreless, his lips without color. Sometimes he seemed to writhe as his wife spoke; he was not as much under the influence of drink as she supposed; but there came a look in his face as he lifted it, that blanched her own still more.

So, it would give you pleasure, would it, to see the last of me?

The candle-light flickered; it was burning down to the frame that supported it, and at every expiring effort, a lurid redness flashed over the small room—over those two white faces—over the innocent beauty of a girl lying in profound slumber near by.

Henry, I wished it had pleased God to let me follow you to the graveyard, rather than to see you the wreck of what you once were. Better the death of the body than ruin of soul.

Well, my lady, if that's been your wish, you need'nt have been so long in telling it, I've been willing any time within the last five years, to leave you, and glad of the chance. No wife shall say twice to me that when I went over the threshold for the last time it would be a happy hour for her. I wish you every possible joy of your release, madam; I am now going out of your door for the last time.

As he spoke, he sprang from the room The cold wind streamed in for a brief second, and put the candle-light out; the chamber was buried in darkness.

Not a sound came from the woman's lips, as she sat there, for a long time, then, when thought had racked her soul beyond the power of silent endurance, she moaned and sobbed, and wept as if her very heart would break.

Mamma, cried a little voice in the darkness; are you here, mamma? is that you crying?

Hush my darling, hush, and sleep; it is very late.

Has papa come yet, I want to kiss him.

O! how that innocent question smote her heart. She had driven one whom her little child could still love, still caress with infantine tenderness, from his home. For a moment her pulses almost stopped with horror, as she remembered the calm, steady way in which he took leave of her. She turned to strike a light. It shone directly upon the portrait of her husband, as he was on his marriage day; and clasping her hands, she stood motionless, scanning those almost faultless lineaments. Then a fearful thought took possession of her. O! I was too hasty, she cried. I have said too much, and may have his death to answer for.

Springing to the entrance, she flew down the stairs, unlatched the door, and standing on the stone step called the name of her husband repeatedly.

O! which way could he have gone? she wailed, striving to look through the thick darkness, and feeling the sharp drops of a fine rain striking against her face.

Out she sped into the stormy night; ran breathlessly, first to one corner than to another; but not a sound, save the distant baying of the watch-dogs, could she hear. Almost frantic, she flew from street to street, peering into the dark porches of the houses. It was nearly midnight, and she met no one on the way. Recalled to herself, at last, by the wet clinging of her garments around her limbs, and the chill tremors that shot through her frame, she sobbingly took her way homeward, and entered to find her little May grieving and calling for father and mother.

But why didn't you bring papa? I want to kiss papa, cried the child.

My May will never kiss papa again, I fear, murmured the sorrowful woman, soothing the child in her arms.

That night of long intense agony! The watching for the morning! when it came—that pale, haggard face, that looked out from the window, so tearless—so stony—yet so awfully grief struck.

A violent fever succeeding, prostrated the mother, and when she came up from the very brink of the grave, they dared not tell her till months of convalesence had established her health again, that two weeks after Henry Remington left his home, a bloated and disfigured body, supposed to be his, though there were but few marks of recognition on the corpse, was found in the river.

Even then, as she learned the sad truth, reason almost fled, and from that hour, Helen Remington was a changed woman. Gathering up her household treasures, she sold the pretty tenement that was her own, a gift from her father, and bought a very small cottage with a few humble rooms. Thither she moved with her little daughter, whose artless prattle about papa stung her poor heart sometimes almost to madness. Relatives and friends offered her a home, but though most keenly sensible of their kindness, she refused them all. She wished no eye but that of God to be witness of her daily grief, and thus choose a life of independence, embittered though it should ever be by remorse.

Ten years passed by, and yet Helen Remington lived in her desolate home with her daughter, a mourning and a sorrowful woman, bearing about with her the consciousness that her passionate words—her want of Christian-like forbearance, had sent a soul unprepared into eternity. She still dressed in deep mourning, and those who saw her said that such sorrow must be genuine, for her dark eyes was sunken and dim—and the hair, though yet abundant, was mixed with threads of silver.

Ella, now grown into womanhood, attended the village academy. It was a long distance from her home; but one day she returned with her face flushed more than usual, and standing in front of her father's portrait she exclaimed, O! how like it was!

What are you speaking of Ella? asked her mother.

As I was coming home, mother I saw a gentleman who looked so much like poor father. And he kept his eyes on me till I had passed him.

Who could it be, I wonder! Where did you see him, Ella?

At the corner of the avenue, opposite our academy. He was in a carriage, and the horses—there were two—stood quite still, as if they had been standing a long while. He looked at all the girls as they came out, but at me, I fancied, more than the rest.

It was only your imagination, my dear, said her mother quietly, though her heart was strangely stirred.

But, indeed, mother, he looked so much like father's portrait—you can't think how exact it was like! only he was more portly, and not as fair. But he had the same [illegible] his cheek.

Helen Remington's heart beat faster: but it was not because of hopes or fears. No—the never-to-be-forgotten scene of that last night came up so vividly before her, that a low cry of anguish escaped her lips, and she hurried from the room.

The next day Ella came home with a new story. The stranger who was so like her father, had visited the school, and conversed with the teacher, who, at his request, had sent home a small sealed note by her. Ella was very pale, and trembled as her mother opened the mystic paper. No sooner had Mrs. Remington glanced at the handwriting than all consciousness left her, and she fell back in a fainting fit. Ella, frightened, and not knowing what course to pursue, ran for the nearest neighbor, and in a short time her mother's room was filled with sympathizing, though inconsiderate friends.

The paper, child, the note, were the first words the mother uttered, when she came to consciousness. Blessed note—he is not dead then. I did not kill him. I am not a murderer. See—here is his own handwriting.

"MY DEAR WIFE: I am no longer a drunkard; will you receive me back to your love, now that I have conquered myself? Most humbly do I ask this boon, conscious that I do not deserve it; but I promise that in time to come, I will be a faithful, loving, temperate husband to you, God helping me."

At that moment the door-bell rang. Ella ran into the room where her pale mother sat. There were tears on her cheeks as she cried:

Mother, he has come—my father, whom we all thought dead—he wants to see you.

Leaning on the arm of her daughter, the repentant, long-suffering wife tottered down the stairs; he heard the first step—sprang impatiently forth—and wife and daughter were clasped to his bosom.

Have you forgiven me, Helen.

Have you forgiven me? was the sobbing question. I sent you from me with cruel words no Christian should utter. O! my husband! that this has resulted in mercy, is of God's most loving-kindness alone. I have died a thousand deaths since I thought we buried you after the waves had given you up. Can you ever forget my cruel un-Christian words?

Freely, dear Helen, and only wonder how it was possible you bore with me so long. Most freely since it has led to my reformation. God be praised—I am a slave no longer. You need never fear that I shall fall again into that accursed sin; for I have, as I trust, placed myself under a powerful Protector—even under the care and guardianship of our Lord Jesus Christ.

But where have you been all this time, father? asked Ella, her gentle eyes shining with happiness.

In a foreign land. In the first heat of resentment, I walked to the city. I did not reach it till near morning, and there finding an old sea-captain, a friend of mine, ready to sail to China, I recklessly took passage with him, as he had often importuned me to do. Once out upon the great ocean, leaving home as I thought, forever, reason came to me. I began to reflect upon my past life, and I could see nothing but crime against society, my wife and family, and my God, there I made a resolve, that with help from on high, I would become the man you once thought me, Helen; that I would never return till I had conquered myself. Many dangers awaited me, but I passed through them all. I went to the golden country, and while there alone, wretched, sick and miserable, I found the great gift that has made me what I am,—the gift of redemption through our Saviour. Now I will make home happy. Here will I erect an altar of praise and thanksgiving to Him who has so wonderfully kept and returned me to you.

The whole village was in an uproar as the news spread. Countless conjectures arose, as to whose was the body they had found, but the identity was never established.—Henry Remington was welcomed as one from the dead.

So flowers blossomed once again along the path of her who had been that most unfortunate of all beings—a drunkard's wife.—Watchman and Reflector.

The Newspaper.

There is no book so instructive as the newspaper; no knowledge so necessary to be acquired as that which may be gleaned from its columns. It is not only the vehicle of the cheapest, but the most innocent and least cloying source of pleasure and happiness. A newspaper in a family is sure, every week to be the means of interesting, informing or pleasing almost every member of the family, especially where they live in the country, and see and hear but little that is new. In the course of a year, a well conducted paper conveys information on almost every subject, or, at least, excites curiosty and inquiry on all subjects. To know what is nearest to us in time and space is most necessary, most pr[illegible]ive; and this kind of knowledge can only be obtained from newspapers. We would venture to affirm that there never was, and never will be, in a country situation, an ignorant family who take a newspaper, as it is impossible that a family should not become in time well informed, provided they live sufficiently secluded to be thrown upon the paper as a source of amusement. The dullest child who hates a book will, in a rainy day take up a newspaper, read a marriage notice and an advertisement or two, and put it down. The next time probably he will become bolder and get through "a horrible murder." Soon he will read short tales of fiction, then just before election time he begins to peep into political speeches. Last of all he attacks foreign news. By this time his curiosity on most subjects is excited, and overcome his aversion and fear of books, and he is lured on to become a reading and well informed man. It is strange that any family, as a measure of economy, should be without a newspaper. Children see the world cheaply at home, in a newspaper, without the danger of bad association or the expense of travel.—News Letter.

Origin of the Bayonet.

The bayonet is an arm peculiarly French. It was invented, it is said, at Bayonne, in 1641, and employed in 1670 in the regiment of the King's Fusiliers. It sensibly modified the system of military art in Europe, as it made cavalry less redoubtable to infantry, and caused the fire of lines of battles to be regarded as the principle means of action.—The bayonet has become the decisive arm of combat.

According to the local tradition, it was in a small hamlet in the environs of Bayonne that this arm was invented. What led to the invention of it was, that, in a fierce combat between some Basque peasants and some Spanish smugglers, the former having exhausted their ammunition, fastened their long knives to their muskets and by means of the weapon so formed put their enemies to flight. This arm rapidly came into general use in Europe. In 1678, at the time of the peace of Nimeguen, all the French grenadiers had the bayonet, but the socket, which makes the use of it so easy, was not invented until a later period. Bayonets at that time were a sort of dagger, of which the handle was placed in the muzzle of the musket, and of course prevented the musket from being fired.

The first battle at which the bayonet was seriously employed was that of Turin in 1682; but it was not until the battle of Spires, in 1703, that the first charge of the bayonet was executed. After that epoch up to 1792, the bayonet was often employed in combat, and the Prince de Ligne called it a "peculiarly French arm," owing to the manner in which soldiers used it; but the real value of it was not revealed until the wars of national independence. Then the bayonet really became a French arm. "The bullet is wild," said Suwaroff, "but the bayonet is prudent and sure."

Quick on the Trigger.

You will please observe, said old Mr. Lambwell, as he led us through his school, that the boys are required to observe the utmost attention to quietness as well as to discipline.

We had at this moment arrived in front of several boys standing around a water bucket, and one had just charged his mouth with the contents of the cup, while the old gentleman was stooping over to recover his pen from the floor, when another passing behind, snapped his fingers quick under the drinker's ear, and caused him on a sudden to eject the contents of his mouth over the pedagogue's bald pate. Standing upright, with his face and hair dripping, the master shouted:

Who done that?

The party unanimously cried out,

Jim Gun, sir.

James Gun, what did you do that for?

Jim, appalled at the mischief he had done, muttered that it was not his fault—that Tom Owen snapt him.

This changed the direction of old Lambwell's wrath, and shaking his cane portentously over Owen's head, he asked:

Did you snap Gun?

The culprit, trembling with fear, muttered:

Yes, sir, I snapt Gun—but I didn't know that he was loaded.

For the Patriot

Life on the Sea Shore.

MR. EDITOR:—No person can live without proper recreation—"All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy." On Saturday, August 20th, a party of young men from this town, sometimes known as Tea sees, started for Nantasket beach on a camping expedition, and selected Skull Head as the spot where they pitched their tents.

A goodly load of glittering generalities, together, and the way Charlie's cripple put them over the shingly beach need not be mentioned. Safely they arrived and speedily the tents were pitched; part of the traps came by the gunning boat, Top of the Heap, with the gallic skipper, better known as the Stone Lugger Cook, an office which he filled with good satisfaction till he quitted his position, and another genuine cook of the French breed was installed in his place. Let not the old cook be passed over lightly. He shot the first plover.

The boys were hungry. A common complaint in that locality—sea water, sea breeze and sea sand generate that complaint.—Whether they could have ate Satan and drank his broth, I do not know—good luck for Satan he was not there. In the midst of the affair who should drive up but the owner of the black horse and his dark complexioned "hopeful"; several young fellows from Boston and elsewhere all bringing a bountiful supply of the good things of earth.

Supper was soon prepared and we had a genuine sea-shore festival. The guests departed and the little hours came on, and when Arcturus and Orion bent far towards the west, we crept beneath our straw-strewed tents, to sleep that quiet sleep that waits upon a clear conscience and an untroubled soul.

Morning came, and when morning had well nigh past, (we did not gun for it was Sunday) the Lugger Cook spread on his savory breakfast, and we all partook with that zeal and earnestness that is evidence of a good appetite. Watching the passing vessels; listening to the roar of the waves as they burst upon the broad Nantasket; gazing out upon the deep dark blue waters of the heaving ocean, our hearts were lifted in adoration to that Great Being whose voice controls the tempest, and who holds the mighty seas in the hollow of his hand. Night came again, and we sank to a quiet repose.

The next morning the boys started for the plains, and having each selected a stand they waited calmly for the advent of the birds, but no birds came. We hoped that there might be a flight of plover, but, alas! we were disappointed. This year the birds are late. The severe storm which occurred ought to have driven them southward, but they came not; the general opinion is, that, as we had a late spring, the young birds were hatched out later than usual, and the flight is consequently delayed. They will come, but from telegraphic dispatch received last night, they say that they shall not be in Quincy before the twelfth of September. Brush up your guns boys, and be ready for them then.

Report says, Mr. Editor, you love good dinners: cold water with a stick in it, and all the et ceteras of seaboard life. I wish you could have been present at one of our dinners. Such clam chowders; such lobsters and perch, and such fried potatoes; ham and corned beef; puddings, heavens and earth what puddings: Indian, apple, blackberry, custard, with and without; all served up, if not with the expense and show of St. Nicholas, yet with more of those substantial inducements which prompt a fellow to do ample justice to the provender put before him. The exquisite fare of the sloop, Maria Hannah, was completely out done by the scientific cookery of Camp No 1. In Camp No. 2, there was evidently a famine, for the members were eternally hungry, and had they not been well supplied, the cows and sheep which infest the plain would have been likely to have fallen victims of their rapacity. As for Camp No 3, this was denominated the Sahara; whether because they always had a desert after dinner, or because the use of water was almost wholly set aside, especially when they had to travel a long journey after it, is more than I know.

Visitors called upon us frequently—lawyers, doctors and other grave citizens. A distinguished gentleman from the sunny South, looked in upon us and was evidently pleased with the scene and the occasion.—He smiled.

A bird pie! Oh such a nice pie! We all took our guns one morning and were determined to shoot all the birds we could find—great or small—when we returned we had a respectable pile; and putting them all into a nicely arranged pie—we did it, at dinner time, such full regard as its merits deserved. It was at this time, I think, that P. and M. ate on a bet; and such quantities they devoured it is impossible to state; all that is known with certainty about the matter is, that the Lugger Cook sank down, exhausted with weariness in supplying them, and immediately resigned his post, and refused further rations to all; he fainted, and was taken off on two chips. Luckily for the party, the French cook arrived, and then it was, that though heretofore living luxuriously, they began to understand the exquisite perfection to which the art of cookery can be attained by the scientific mind. It is said that a celebrated cook once committed suicide because there was not salt enough in the soup [illegible] here for any such rash act; every thing was absolutely perfect; every bird was done to a turn; every fish was of an exquisite color, and every slice of potato was as brown as the most finished work that ever came from the pencil of Salvator Rosa.

I could dilate more fully upon the scene; but time, the great arbiter of the world, in flapping his giant wings, fans away all lighter matters and bears us to the end of our journey. We were about striking our tents, after the sojourn of a week—the Millers Maid had borne a portion of our company on their way homeward and we were waiting the approach of Ben to carry home our goods and chattels, when the same black steed came spanking round the base of Strawberry hill, and this time our eyes were gladdened, not only with the presence of our worthy Representative, but also, with that of him, who, for many months, had been wandering among the bright scenes and mouldering ruins of the European and Asiatic world. Right glad were we to welcome him back to his native soil. A few moments later, another of our respected citizens came to our tent with two of his sons, and a happy party under old Skullhead were gathered there that day.

How Skipper George, of the nameless, brought the members of No. 2 from Hull; how Frank bent under his heavy burden; how the ghost in his white garment, so frightened Galen, that he rushed heels over head for home; how the Prairie Chicken told his wonderful tales, how Tom and Kenny danced in the drizzly night-wind, and the musical howlings of Loring and Billy scared the birds from the sea-shore, I need not now communicate.

We were all ready to start—but the fiend hunger bid us delay. Dinner—we must have a dinner before we go on our way. The French cook was on hand; science and strength came to his aid—a goodly trio. Mark what a feast was prepared, and that too on the spur of the moment. In honor of our Cook and of our traveller friend, we give the bill of fare after the style of our great Metropolitan hotels.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

ADAMS LITERARY ASSOCIATION. We are pleased to learn of the prosperity of this useful Institution. Our young friends, and possibly some who are older, would do well to join the Association. Some one says, "Reading makes a full man; writing makes a correct man; speaking makes a ready man." All should acquire the art of expressing their thoughts in public; not that all should be public speakers, but all may be placed in positions where this accomplishment would be very desirable.

The meetings of the Association are free to the public, but members have access every week to a well-selected library. The first meeting for the season is to be held next Monday evening at the Hall over Messrs. Gill & Co's store.

THE ENCAMPMENT AT CONCORD. Tuesday was a busy day with our Volunteer Militia—burnishing up their arms—packing and forwarding military stores for the Three Day's Encampment at Concord. Our rival little corps, the Hancock Light Guards, turned out for the occasion, over fifty strong—rank and file—and under their popular Commander, at half past one o'clock, took up their line of march for the memorable battle field—sacred to the memory of departed heroes, and where England received her first lesson of American valor and patriotism. The trip must have been a pleasant one—associated as it was with pleasing reminiscences: the weather also being favorable, neither too hot nor too cold—a cool and refreshing breeze blowing from the northwest during the whole time—a circumstance rather unusual at this season of the year. It was a great military pageant, or show, the like of which was never before seen in Massachusets; the whole resources of the State were brought into requisition to give it effect. But the scenes there enacted were far different from those of the last century, when Davis and his compeers, with their little band of followers, staked their lives and fortunes in defence of their homes, against British aggression. It has turned out a pleasant affair, and we hope all things considered, it will not prove too expensive a one.

POLITICAL. The Democrats of this town, at their Caucus on Saturday evening last, made choice of the following named gentlemen, to represent them in their Convention, to be held at Worcester on the 15th instant: [illegible], Josiah Hayden, Albion Dearborn, Jonathan Jameson, Charles P. Tirrell, Thompson Baxter, Nathaniel White, John A. Green, George L. Miller, Eleazer Frederic and John Parker.

LATEST STYLE. The latest style of hoop-skirt is the grand self-adjusting, double-back, action-bustle, Etruscan lace-expanston, spiral Piccolomini attachment, gossamer indestructible! It is a "love of a thing."

FEMALE SLAVERY IN ENGLAND. A female domestic in England lately gave notice to her master that she was about to leave him to be married. Her master refused to accept her notice, but in spite of his refusal, she went off and got married. The master then obtained the services of an officer who arrested the delinquent and carried her before a magistrate. The official sentenced her to a fine of £1 and to return to the service of her master, and the sentence was put in immediate execution.

FALL TRADE. This is the time, kind reader, for you to buy all necessary articles for fall and winter use. All kinds of goods are probably cheaper now, than they will be a few weeks hence when trade is more brisk. Then, too, our shopkeepers will be busy, and cannot give their customers so good an opportunity to select what they wish. And we would also say to those who want anything in the shape of covering for the feet, to call and examine C. Gill & Co.'s immense assortment of Boots, Shoes, Gaiters, &c., &c.

TO DYSPEPTICS—and all others troubled with bilious complaints, call at once on Mrs. Woods, Cottage Avenue, and secure a bottle of her invaluable bitters. It is just the thing for you—rely upon it, for we have tried it. It promotes a healthy digestion; corrects the bile; regulates the bowels; produces quiet sleep, and general good feelings. It is free from all mineral substances, being compounded from simples culled from the great field of Nature; it carries off impurities from the system in an astonishing manner,—for children's complaints, also, it is an excellent remedy, effectually expelling worms.

The cost is but trifling—only 25 cents for pint and fifty cents cents for quart bottles—which may be had pure by application to the proprietor, at her residence on Cottage Avenue

SALE OF REAL ESTATE. We would call the attention of our readers to the sale of the valuable estate of the late Moses R. Marsh. This property is situated a few rods north of the Stone Temple, and on the most public thoroughfare in this village. It is near the depot, churches, schools, and should command the attention of all who want a pleasant country residence. For further particulars, see Executors' sale, in to day's paper.

☞ By means of "My Mother's Salve" many a one has blessed the day they first procured it. There is no article in existence so healing and soothing to the irritated flesh as this salve. See advertisement.

Boston Correspondence

Boston, Sept. 5, 1859.

Appearance of Boston.—State Encampment in full operation.—The Commander-in-Chief on hand - Message from the tent field.—Legislature—Colonel Packard's Fourth Regiment.—The Great Eastern Steam Ship coming to the United States—Enthusiastic Reception of Judge Douglas at Pittsburgh—Presidential prospects.

The city seems forsaken, by reason of the great stampede to Concord. The State Muster has a visible effect on most kind of business, it being beautifully dull in all branches. The charming weather contributed much to the interest of the State Encampment. The weather could not be finer. To the moment of my writing, we hear of no accident or disorder on the Camp Ground, and so far, expectations as to order and discipline, have been answered. There are about five thousand troops on the field, and as good looking soldiers, as can be found in our country, presenting strictly a la militaire demonstration. The Governor was at the Encampment early on Tuesday Evening; and, it is said, at one o'clock, Wednesday morning, addressed a Message to the Legislature, informing them he was engaged in military duties, and inviting them to visit the Muster Ground on Friday, suggesting to them, that while the whole Voluntary Militia is in parade, the civil power, or "assembled wisdom" of the State should honor them by their presence. An invitation I have no doubt they will gladly accept.

The papers speak highly of the appearance of the Fourth Regiment under Colonel Packard, at Concord, including the Hancock Light Guards of Quincy. "This regiment is out with unusually full numbers, and report speaks very highly of their discipline. It is the largest regiment in the State."

In a few days we shall have an attraction of another kind from a different quarter. The Great Eastern Steamship is to leave Europe for Portland, Maine, on the 15th instant. It is predicted she will perform the passage across the Atlantic in six days. She comes to Portland by reason of the great depth of water leading to the harbor, which exceeds that of Boston and New York harbors, or perhaps any other in the United States. It is not improbable that this Leviathan of the ocean, will be visited at Portland by an hundred thousand persons or more from the States, besides Maine, before she returns to England. It is said her accommodations are sufficient to transport ten thousand persons to any part of the world.

There is much uncertainty whether she will again visit America as [illegible] been made for her to proceed to Southern Asia. It is hoped the fare to Portland by railroad will be reduced to half the usual rates during her stay there, so as to increase the inducement of the public to visit the largest ship that ever floated on water.

Telegraphic dispatches from Pittsburgh, (Pa.) of Tuesday, informs us of the arrival of Senator Douglas at that place, where he was well received. Through Pennsylvania, the citizens of the different towns greeted him with enthusiasm. Large numbers visited him at the St. Charles Hotel in Pittsburg. In the evening an immense concourse assembled in the street opposite his lodgings, when Judge Douglas addressed them in a speech of an hour's duration, eliciting enthusiastic applauses. The next day he left for Columbus, Ohio, where he again will make a public address. Should he receive the Charleston nomination in May next by the National Democratic Convention, he bids fair to carry three-fourth of all the electoral votes of the States. His principles are so sound on the great questions at issue, that the masses of the people highly approve, and give them a chance, will ratify their approbation at the polls in 1860. There is an uncertainty about his receiving the nomination at Charleston, as the "Fire-eaters" of the South are opposed to him, because he is pledged to Popular Sovereignty, Congressional non-interference, and suppression of the foreign Slave-trade; no man can be elected to the next Presidency unless he advocates these views in their popular and legitimate sense.

LIBRARY OF THE LATE RUFUS CHOATE. The large and valuable library of the late Rufus Choate, embracing upwards of seven thousand volumes, will be sold at public sale during the month of October. The law library will comprise three thousand volumes.

FLORAL OFFERING. We were yesterday made the recipient of a most beautiful present, from the Botanical Gardens of Messrs. Barnes & Washburn, of Dorchester. It was a rich boquet, of choice flowers, arranged in exquisite taste, blending the shades and tints in such admirable order, as to give a most pleasing and happy effect. It looked like the magic work of a fairy. As a parlor ornament, nothing could be more graceful; its aromatic perfumes leaving an agreeable and refreshing sensation. Messrs. B. & W., it will be seen by their advertisement are prepared to furnish the public with flowers, in any style which may be ordered, and at all seasons of the year—for families, to grace the bridal altar, or to strew the pathway to the tomb.

For the Patriot.

Personal.

Boston, Sept. 9th, 1859.

MR. EDITOR: After an absence of eighteen years from my birthplace—good old Boston—I am now enjoying a pleasant and agreeable visit to my many friends here.—The good old pump-handle shake of the hand, with which all, on every side, greeted me, brings vividly to mind many recollections of the past, and warms up my old blood, as these are recalled to view.

Of all this, however, I shall mention nothing—the object of this paper being only to state a fact, which it pleases me to bring to your especial notice—a fact, I have obtained directly, from the mouths of several witnesses, who bear ample testimony of the high worth of the able Representative of your town in the Legislature of the Commonwealth—as also one of the Committee on the Revised Statutes—the Hon. William S. Morton.

It is the opinion expressed by every one with whom I have conversed on the subject, that never was the town so well represented as by the Hon. Mr. Morton; Democrats claiming him as an ingrain Democrat—while parties in opposition to the Democracy, appreciate his liberal views on all topics; and especially that one, of all others, which is between man and the Creator—and in which the gentry of the white cravat and robe have so long conspicuously figured in the Legislature of this State.

Surely, a man must possess no ordinary faculties of mind—no small amount of learning and wisdom to gain so successfully the good will and commendation of men of all sects and creeds in politics, morals, and religion, outside of his own constituents; and truly fortunate it is for your townsmen, that a gentleman of his commanding talents and influence represents them in the General Court. That he long may live, and continue thus to fill his present position as Representative of your town, is to be desired by every well-wisher of the public good—be he a Democrat, or any other party-man in politics.

DOWN EASTER.

Coal for the School Houses.

The coal dealers of Quincy have the right to complain of the manner in which the contract for supplying coal for town purposes has been given out this year. Heretofore it has been supplied by the lowest bidder, but this season no one had a chance to make proposals. The School Committee, delegated one of their number, empowering him to purchase [illegible] School Houses, with the understanding however, that notice should be issued, asking coal dealers to bring in proposals to furnish the same.

No notice of the kind was ever issued, and no coal dealer was ever informed in relation to the matter. On the contrary, the first thing that was known about it was, that the School House bins were being filled by a firm in this town, at a price, fifty cents higher a ton, than other coal dealers would have been glad to have filled the orders for and seventy-five cents higher than Boston prices.

Favoritism in such matters, is particularly mean. The coal dealers of this town are all good citizens, and are entitled to an equal share of the town's patronage, where they supply their articles on equally favorable terms. A man, however, has a perfect right to exhibit his favoritism when the expense comes out of his own pocket; but when it is exhibited at other people's expense, it ought to be exposed and rebuked. If those who have the guardianship of the town's affairs, make use of their office, to sponge the people either for themselves or their friends, the sooner the fact becomes known the better.

I throw no blame on the School Committee, they supposed they were dealing with an honorable man; but they, as well as the town, having been deceived, I trust all parties will be more cautious for the future.

EXTENSIVE arrangements have been made to increase the attractions of the occasion, and it is confidently hoped that the show of the products of the County will equal those of any former year. Several of the finest Jersey and Devon herds in the State, which are owned in this County, have been promised to the Show, which, in addition to the other contributions of stock, it is confidently believed, will render it equal if not superior to any previous exhibition of the Society. Suitable provision will be made for Swine, Poulty, &c,

Our Circulation and Prospects

The NEW YORK WEEKLY has gone up to a circulation which places it second in point of circulation in the list of publications of the day. There is but one weekly publication in the world having a larger circulation than the WEEKLY. The indications are, at present, that the circulation of the WEEKLY will soon reach half a million.—Where the newsmen were taking tens, they are now taking hundreds of copies. This is the general effect among the Five Thousand News Agents who are now selling the NEW YORK WEEKLY, while from nearly every Post Office in the country, we are daily getting subscriptions and orders for specimens.

How and where to get the Weekly.

Wherever there is a News Agent, get the [illegible] from him. By so doing you do not run the risk of losing your money through the Post Office, or having to pay for what you will never get. If the paper you are buying from the Agent stops, you do not lose advance subscriptions, sent to a place where you have no means of looking after it. We trust the day is not far distant when every town, large enough to sustain a Post Office, will have its News Agency.

OUR TERMS.

The price of the NEW YORK WEELY FOUR CENTS, but where Agents have to pay extra freight or postage, a higher price is necessarily charged. When sent by mail, the price will invariably be $2 a year, in advance. Subscriptions taken for three months. Two copies will be sent for one year for $3, four copies for $6, eight copies for $12. Postmasters and others who get up clubs of ten, and send us $15 at one time, will be entitled to an extra copy for their trouble. The bills of all solvent banks taken at par for subscriptions. Canada subscribers must send twenty-five cents extra with every subscription, to pre-pay the American postage.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

A compound remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Para Sarsaparilla, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from Strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found of the following complaints:—

SCROFULA AND SCROFULOUS COMPLAINTS, ERUPTIONS AND ERUPTIVE DISEASES, ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES, TUMORS, SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, SYPHILIS AND SYPHILITIC AFFECTIONS, MERCURIAL DISEASE, DROPSY, NEURALGIA OR TIC DOULOUREUX, DEBILITY, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, ERYSIPELAS, ROSE OR ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, and indeed the whole class of complaints arising from IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD.

This compound will be found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the foul humors which fester in the blood at that season of the year. By the timely expulsion of them many rankling disorders are nipped in the bud. Multitudes can, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerous sores, through which the system will strive to rid itself of corruptions, if not assisted to do this through the natural channels of the body by an alterative medicine. Cleanse out the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, or sores; cleanse it when you find it is obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Even where no particular disorder is felt, people enjoy better health, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. Keep the blood healthy, and all is well; but with this pabulum of life disordered, there can be no lasting health. Sooner or later something must go wrong, and the great machinery of life is disordered or overthrown.

Sarsaparilla has, and deserves much, the reputation, of accomplishing these ends. But the world has been egregiously deceived by preparations of it, partly because the drug alone has not all the virtue that is claimed for it, but more because many preparations, pretending to be concentrated extracts of it, contain but little of the virtue of Sarsaparilla, or any thing else.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter and painful disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself is justly despised, and has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound Sarsaparilla, and intend to supply such a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. And we think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. In order to secure their complete eradication from the system, the remedy should be judiciously taken according to directions on the bottle.

PREPARED BY
DR. J. C. AYER & CO.
LOWELL, MASS.
Price, $1 per Bottle; Six Bottles for $5.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

has won for itself such a renown for the cure of every variety of Throat and Lung Complaint, that it is entirely unnecessary for us to recount the evidence of its virtues, wherever it has been employed. As it has long been in constant use throughout this section, we need not do more than assure the people its quality is kept up to the best it ever has been, and that it may be relied on to do for their relief all it has ever been found to do.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR THE CURE OF
Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach, Erysipelas, Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Tetter, Tumors and Salt Rheum, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, as a Dinner Pill, and for Purifying the Blood.

They are sugar-coated, so that the most sensitive can take them pleasantly, and they are the best aperient in the world for all the purposes of a family physic.

Price 25 cents per Box; Five boxes for $1.00.

Great numbers of Clergymen, Physicians, Statesmen, and eminent personages, have lent their names to certify the unparalleled usefulness of these remedies, but our space here will not permit the insertion of them. The Agents below named furnish gratis our AMERICAN ALMANAC in which they are given; with also full descriptions of the above complaints, and the treatment that should be followed for their cure.

Do not be put off by unprincipled dealers with other preparations they make more profit on. Demand AYER'S, and take no others. The sick want the best aid there is for them, and they should have it.

All our Remedies are for sale by
Mrs. E. HAYDEN, and all Medicine Dealers.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

A compound remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Para Sarsaparilla, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from Strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found of the following complaints:—

SCROFULA AND SCROFULOUS COMPLAINTS, ERUPTIONS AND ERUPTIVE DISEASES, ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES, TUMORS, SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, SYPHILIS AND SYPHILITIC AFFECTIONS, MERCURIAL DISEASE, DROPSY, NEURALGIA OR TIC DOULOUREUX, DEBILITY, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, ERYSIPELAS, ROSE OR ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, and indeed the whole class of complaints arising from IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD.

This compound will be found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the foul humors which fester in the blood at that season of the year. By the timely expulsion of them many rankling disorders are nipped in the bud. Multitudes can, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerous sores, through which the system will strive to rid itself of corruptions, if not assisted to do this through the natural channels of the body by an alterative medicine. Cleanse out the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, or sores; cleanse it when you find it is obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Even where no particular disorder is felt, people enjoy better health, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. Keep the blood healthy, and all is well; but with this pabulum of life disordered, there can be no lasting health. Sooner or later something must go wrong, and the great machinery of life is disordered or overthrown.

Sarsaparilla has, and deserves much, the reputation, of accomplishing these ends. But the world has been egregiously deceived by preparations of it, partly because the drug alone has not all the virtue that is claimed for it, but more because many preparations, pretending to be concentrated extracts of it, contain but little of the virtue of Sarsaparilla, or any thing else.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter and painful disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself is justly despised, and has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound Sarsaparilla, and intend to supply such a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. And we think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. In order to secure their complete eradication from the system, the remedy should be judiciously taken according to directions on the bottle.

PREPARED BY
DR. J. C. AYER & CO.
LOWELL, MASS.
Price, $1 per Bottle; Six Bottles for $5.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

has won for itself such a renown for the cure of every variety of Throat and Lung Complaint, that it is entirely unnecessary for us to recount the evidence of its virtues, wherever it has been employed. As it has long been in constant use throughout this section, we need not do more than assure the people its quality is kept up to the best ever it has been, and that it may be relied on to do for their relief all it has ever been found to do.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach, Erysipelas, Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Tetter, Tumors and Salt Rheum, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, as a Dinner Pill, and for Purifying the Blood.

They are sugar-coated, so that the most sensitive can take them pleasantly, and they are the best aperient in the world for all the purposes of a family physic.

Price 25 cents per Box; Five boxes for $1.00.

Great numbers of Clergymen, Physicians, Statesmen, and eminent personages, have lent their names to certify the unparalleled usefulness of these remedies, but our space here will not permit the insertion of them. The Agents below named furnish gratis our AMERICAN ALMANAC in which they are given; with also full descriptions of the above complaints, and the treatment that should be followed for their cure.

Do not be put off by unprincipled dealers with other preparations they make more profit on. Demand AYER'S, and take no others. The sick want the best aid there is for them, and they should have it.

All our Remedies are for sale by

Mrs. E. HAYDEN, and all Medicine Dealers.

Poetry.

Speak Gently.

To the erring by thy side,
Who has not strength to stem the tide,
And to temptation's voice gives ear,
Tho' he thy admonitions hear,
Speak gently, friend.

Divine, the Saviour in his grief,
Gives peace and hope to the dying thief!
And should this precept, now be lost?
Where'er you are, whate'er it cost?
Speak gently, friend.

Oh! blest the boon! and sweet the task,
From off the heart to raise the mask;
To earn the dark storm of sorrow,
And rainbow tints of sunshine borrow,
Speak gently, friend.

On friends and weary pilgrims all,
Let no harsh words of chiding fall,
That like the biting frosts of Spring,
No blight and desolation bring.
Speak gently, friend.

To My Wife

BY GEORGE W. DEWEY.

Come, draw thy chair beside me, love,
The present cares beguile;
What though the winter crowns around,
There's summer in thy smile?
Let all thy smiles beam on me now,
And o'er the future throw
The radiance of the joy we shared,
This day, ten years ago!

Aye, lean upon me lovingly,
And, with those eyes of thine,
Gaze fondly down the pictured past,
As I do now with mine;
And may the golden light, which shone
Upon Hope's rosy glass,
Illumine all the mirror's disc
Wherein the visions pass.

How like the mirror on the wall—
Obscured by mists awhile,
Reflecting still the image there
When sunshine spreads a smile—
Is now the inward glass we search
For faded scenes of yore,
Which, warming in the light of love,
Will every tint restore.

Entwine thine arms around me, love,
Recalling by-gone hours,
The present to the past shall be,
A rosary of flowers;
And as we reckon up the buds—
Some withered ere the bloom—
A tear shall mark the vacant spot
Of one within the tomb.

A cherished one, whose voice rang out
With music of the spheres,
Where now, in anthem melody,
A vocal part she bears.
Ah! vividly the glass restores
That rosy face of glee,
Which though a semblance of myself,
An image was of thee.

We would not wish her here again,
For, now we ever see
A cherub in the child we lost—
A sacred memory:
And, had she lived, a thing of earth,
To yield us earthly love,
We now would miss the angel guide
To lead our thoughts above.

The Autumn Leaf.

Poor Autumn leaf! down floating
Upon the blustering gale;
Torn from thy bough, where goest now,
Wither'd and shrunk and pale?

I go, thou sad inquirer,
As list the wind to blow,
Sear, sapless, lost and tempest-tost,
I go where all things go,

The rude winds bear me onward
As suiteth them, not me,
O'er dale, o'er hill, through good, through ill,
As destiny bears thee.

What thou for me one summer,
And threescore f r thy breath—
I live my span, thou thine, poor man!
And then adown to death!

And thus we go together,
For lofty as thy lot
And lowly mine, my fate is thine,
To die, and be forgot!

Anecdotes.

An old lady down east having kept a hired man on liver nearly a month, said to him one day,

Well John, you don't seem to like liver.

Oh, yes, said John, I like liver well for fifty meals, but not as a steady diet.

One of the hardest sort of people was asked to subscribe to some worthy object.

I can't he replied: I must be just before I am generous.

Well, said the one who made the request, let me know just before you are generous, and I'll try you again.

What is the reason your wife and you always disagree? asked one Irishman of another.

Because we are both of one mind. She wants to be master, and so do I, was the answer.

A gentleman who had been the subject of severe attack in a newspaper was asked,—

Who do you suppose is the author of these articles, and what can be the reason of his malice?

Malice! said he, not the least of it in the world; it is some young fellow learning to write.

I hav'n't another word to say, wife—I never dispute with fools.

No, husband; you are very sure to agree with them.

Race for a Sweetheart.

Hardly any event creates a stronger sensation in a thinly settled New England village, especially among the young folks, than the arrival of a fresh and blooming Miss, who comes to make her abode in the neighborhood. When, therefore, Squire Johnson, the only lawyer in the place, and a very respectable man of course, told Farmer Jones one afternoon that his wife's sister, a smart girl of eighteen, was coming in a few days to reside in the family, the news flew like wildfire through Pond village, and was the principal topic of conversation for a week. Pond village is situated upon the margin of one of those numerous and beautiful sheets of water that gem the whole surface of New England like the bright stars in the evening sky, and received its appellation to distinguish it from two or three other villages in the same town, which could not boast of similar location.

When farmer Jones came in to his supper about sunset that afternoon, and took his seat at the table, the eyes of the whole family were upon him, for there was a peculiar working about his lips that always told them when he had anything of interest to communicate. But Farmer Jones' secretiveness was large, and his temperament not the most active, and he would probably have rolled the important secret as a sweet morsel under his tongue for a long time, had not Mrs. Jones, who was rather of an impatient and prying turn of mind, contrived to draw it from him.

Now, Mr. Jones, said she, as she handed him his cup of tea, what is it you are going to say? Do out with it; for you've chawed something or other over in your mind ever since you came into the house.

It's my tobaccer, I s'pose, said Mr. Jones, with another knowing glance of his eye.

Now, father, what's the use! said Susan; we all know you've got something or other you want to say, and why can't you tell us what 'tis?

La, who cares what 'tis? said Mrs. Jones; if it was worth telling, we shouldn't have to wait for it, I dare say.

Hereupon Mrs. Jones assumed an air of the most perfect indifference, as the surest way of conquering what she was pleased to call Mr. Jones' obstinacy; which by the way, was a very improper term to apply in the case; for it was purely the working of secretiveness, without the least particle of obstinacy attached to it.

There was a pause of two or three minutes in the conversation, till Mr. Jones passed his cup to be filled the second time, when with a couple of preparatory hems he began to let out the secret.

We are to have a new neighbor here in a few days, said Mr. Jones, stopping short when he had uttered this much, and sipping his tea and filling his mouth with food.

Mrs. Jones, who was perfect in her tactics, said not a word, but attended to the affairs of the table as though she had not noticed what was said. The farmer's secretiveness had at last worked itself out, and he began again.

Squire Johnson's wife's sister is coming here in a few days, and is going to live with 'em.

The news being thus fairly divulged, left free scope for conversation.

Well, I wonder if she is a proud stuck, up piece? said Mrs. Jones.

I shouldn't think she would be, said Susan, for there ain't a more sociable woman in the neighborhood than Mrs. Johnson. So if she is at all like her sister, I think we shall like her.

I wonder how old she is? said Stephen, who was just verging towards the close of his twenty-first year.

The Squire called her eighteen, said Mr. Jones, giving a sly wink to his wife, as much as to say, that's about the right age for Stephen.

I wonder if she is handsome, said Susan, who was somewhat vain of her own looks, and having been a sort of reigning belle in Pond village, for some time, she felt a little alarmed at the idea of a rival.

I dare be bound she's handsome, said Mrs. Jones, if she's sister to Mrs. Johnson, for where'll you find a handsomer woman than Mrs. Johnson, go the town through?

After supper, Stephen went down to Mr. Robinson's store, and told the news to young Charles Robinson, and the young fellows who were gathered for a game at quoits and a ring at wrestling. And Susan went directly over to Mr. Bean's and told Patty, and Patty went round to the Widow Davis's and told Sally, and before nine o'clock the matter was pretty well understood in and about every house in the village.

At the close of the fourth day, a little before sunset, a chaise was seen to drive up to Squire Johnson's door. Of course the eyes of the whole village were turned in that direction. Sally Davis, who was just coming in from milking, set her pail down on the grass by the side of the road as soon as the chaise came in sight, and watched it till it reached the Squire's door, and the gentleman and lady had got out and gone into the house. Patty Bean was doing up the ironing that afternoon, and she had just taken a hot iron from the fire as the chaise passed the door, and she ran with it in her hand and stood on the door-steps till the whole ceremony of alighting, greeting, and entering the house was over.

Old Mrs. Bean stood with her head out of the window, her iron-bowed spectacles resting upon the top of her forehead, her shrivelled hand placed across her eye brows to defend her red eyes from the rays of the setting sun, and her skinny chin protruding about three inches in advance of a couple of stubs of teeth, which her open mouth exposed fairly to view.

Seems to me they are dreadful loving, said old Mrs Bean, as she saw Mrs. Johnson descend the step and welcome her sister with a kiss.

La me, if there isn't the squire kissing of her tu, said Patty! Well, I declare, I would wait till I got into the house, I'll die if I wouldn't. It looks so vulgar to be kissing afore folks, and out of doors tu; I should think Squire Johnson would be ashamed of himself.

Well, I shouldn't, said young John Bean, who came up at that moment, and who had passed the chaise just as the young lady alighted from it. I shouldn't be ashamed to kiss such a pretty gal as that, any how; I'd kiss her wherever I could catch her, If it was in the meeting house.

Why, is she handsome, Jack? said Patty.

Yes, she's got the prettiest little puckery mouth I've seen these six months. Her cheeks are red, and her eyes shine like new buttons.

Well, replied Patty, if she'll only take the shine off Susan Jones when she goes to meetin' Sunday, I shan't care.

While these observations were going on at old Mr. Bean's, Charles Robinson and a group of young fellows with him, were standing in front of Robinson's store a little farther down the road, and watching the scenes that was passing at Squire Johnson's. They witnessed the whole with becoming decorum, now and then making a remark upon the fine horse and the handsome chaise, till they saw the tall Squire bend his head and give the young lady a kiss, when they all burst into a loud laugh. In a moment, being conscious that their laugh must be heard and noticed at the Squire's, they in order to do away with the impression it must necessarily make, at once turned their heads another way, and Charles Robinson, who was quick at an expedient, knocked off the hat of the lad who was standing next to him, and then they all laughed louder than before.

Here comes Jack Bean, said Charles, now we shall hear something about her, for Jack was coming by the Squire's when she got out of the chaise. How does she look, Jack?

Handsome as a picture, said Jack. I havn't seen a prettier gal since last Thanksgiving Day, when Jane Ford was here to visit Susan Jones.

Black eyes or blue? said Charles.

Blue, said Jack, but all-fired bright.

Tall or short? said Stephen Jones, who was rather short himself, and therefore felt a particular interest on that point.

Rather short, said Jack, but straight and round as a young colt.

Do you know what her name is? said Charles.

They called her Lucy when she got out of the chaise, said Jack, and as Mrs. Johnson's name was Brown before she was married, I s'pose her name must be Lucy Brown.

Just such a name as I like, said Charles Robinson. Lucy Brown sounds well. Now suppose in order to get acquainted with her, we all hands take a sail to-morrow night, about this time, on the pond, and invite her to go with us.

Agreeed, said Stephen Jones.

Agreed, said Jack Bean.

Agreed, said all hands.

The question then arose who should carry the invitation to her; and the young men being rather bashful on that score, it was finally settled that Susan Jones should bear the invitation and accompany her to the boat, where they should all be in waiting to receive her.

The next day, was a very long day, at least to most of the young men at Pond village; and promptly an hour before sunset, most of them were assembled, with a score of their sisters and female cousins, by a little stone wharf on the margin of the pond, for the proposed sail. All the girls of the village, of a suitable age, were there, except Patty Bean. She had undergone a good deal of fidgetting and fussing during the day, to prepare for the sail, but had been disappointed. Her new bonnet was not done; and as to wearing her old flapsided bonnet, she declared she would not, if she never went. Presently Susan Jones and Miss Lucy Brown were seen coming down the road.

In a moment all was quiet, the laugh and the joke were hushed, and each one put on his best looks.

When they arrived, Susan went through the ceremony of introducing Miss Brown to each of the ladies and gentlemen present.

But how in the world are you going to sail? said Miss Brown, for there isn't a breath of wind? and I don't see any sail boat neither.

Oh, the less wind we have the better when we sail here, said Charles Robinson, and there's our sail boat, pointing to a flat-bottomed scow boat, some twenty feet long by ten wide.

We don't use no sails, said Jack Bean; sometimes, when the wind is fair, we put up a bush to help pull along a little, and when 'tisn't we row.

The party were soon embarked on board the scow, and a couple of oars were in motion, and they glided slowly and pleasantly over as lovely a sheet of water as ever glowed in a sunsetting ray.

In about one hour's time, the whole party felt perfectly acquainted with Miss Lucy Brown. She had talked in the most lively manner, she had told stories and sung songs. Among others she had given Moore's boat song with the sweetest possible effect: and by the time they returned to the landing, it would hardly be too much to say that half the young men were in love with her.

A stern regard to truth requires a remark to be made here, not altogether favorable to Susan Jones, which is the more to be regretted, as she was in the main an excellent hearted girl, and highly esteemed by the whole village. It was observed that as the company grew more and more pleasant with Miss Lucy Brown, Susan Jones was less and less animated, till at last she became quite reserved and apparently sad. She, however, on landing, accompanied her home to Squire Johnson's door, and cordially bid her good night.

The casual glimpses which the young men of Pond village had of Miss Brown, during the remainder of the week, as she occasionally stood at the door or looked out of the window, or once or twice when she walked out with Susan Jones, and the fair view they all had of her at meeting on the Sabbath, served but to increase their admiration, and to render her more and more an object of attraction. She was regarded by all as a prize, and several of them were already planning what steps it was best to take in order to win her. The two most prominent candidates, however, for Miss Brown's favor, were Charles Robinson and Stephen Jones. Their position and standing among the young men of the village seemed to put all others in the back ground. Charles, whose father was wealthy, had every advantage which money could procure. But Stephen, though poor, had decidedly the advantage of Charles in personal recommendation. He had more talent, was more sprightly and intelligent, and more pleasing in his address. From the evening of the sail on the pond they had both watched every movement of Miss Brown with the most intense interest; and, as nothing had decided a lover, each had, with an interest no less intense, watched every movement of the other. They had ceased to speak to each other about her, and if her name was mentioned in their presence, both were observed to color.

The second week after her arrival, through the influence of Squire Johnson, the district school was offered to Miss Brown, on the other side of the pond, which offer was accepted and she went immediately to take charge of it. This announcement at first threw something of a damper upon the spirits of the young people of Pond village. But when it was understood that the school would continue but a few weeks, and being but a mile and a half distant, Miss Brown would come home every Saturday afternoon, and spend the Sabbath, it was not very difficult to be reconciled to the temporary arrangement. The week wore away heavily, especially to Charles Robinson and Stephen Jones. They counted the days impatiently till Saturday, and on Saturday they counted the long and laggard hours to noon. They had both made up their minds that it would be dangerous to wait any longer, and they had both resolved not to let another Sabbath pass without making direct proposals to Miss Brown.

Stephen Jones was too early a riser for Charles Robinson, and, in any enterprise where both were concerned, was certain to take the lead, except where money could carry the palm, and then of course it was always borne away by Charles. As Miss Lucy had been absent most of the week, and was to be at home that afternoon, Charles Robinson had made an arrangement with his mother and sister to have a little party in the evening, for the purpose of inviting Miss Brown; and then of course, he should walk home with her in the evening, and then of course would be an opportunity to break the ice, and make known his wishes and feelings. Stephen Jones, however, was more prompt in his movements. He had got wind of the proposed tea party, although himself and sister for obvious reasons had not been invited, and he resolved not to risk the arrival of Miss Brown, and her visit to Mr. Robertson before he should see her. She would dismiss her school at noon, and come the distance of a mile and a half round the pond home. His mind was at once made up. He would go round and meet her at the school house and accompany her on her walk. There, in that winding road, round those delightful waters, with the tall and shady trees overhead, and the wild grapevines twining round the trunks and climbing to the branches, while the wild birds were singing through the woods, and the wild ducks playing in the coves along the shore, surely, there, if any where in the world, could a man bring his mind up to the point of speaking love.

Accordingly a little before noon, Stephen washed and brushed himself up, and put on his Sunday clothes and started on his expedition. In order to avoid observation, he took a back route across the field, intending to come into the road by the pond, a little out of the village. As ill luck would have it, Charles Robinson had been out in the same direction, and was returning with an armful of boughs and wild flowers to ornament the parlor in the evening. He saw Stephen and noticed his dress, and the direction he was going, and he at once smoked the whole business. His first impulse was to rush upon him and collar him, and demand that he should return back. But when he recollected that in the last scratch he had with Stephen, two or three years before, he had a little the worst of it, he instinctively stood still, while Stephen passed on without seeing him. It flashed upon his mind at once that the question must now be reduced to a game of speed. If he could not by any means gain the school house first, he should feel a good deal of uneasiness for the consequences. Stephen was walking very leisurely, and unconscious that he was in danger of a competitor on the course, and it was important that his suspicions should not be awakened. Charles therefore remained perfectly quiet, till Stephen had got a little out of hearing, and then threw down his bushes and flowers and ran to the wharf below the store with his utmost speed. He had one advantage over Stephen. He was ready at a moment's warning to start on an expedition of this kind, for Sunday clothes were an every day affair with him.

There was a light canoe belonging to his father, lying at the wharf, and a couple of stout boys were there a fishing. Charles hailed them, and told them that if they would row him across the pond as quick as they possibly could, he would give them a quarter of a dollar a piece. This, in their view, was a splendid offer for their services, and they jumped on board with alacrity and managed the oars. Charles took a paddle and stood in the stern to steer the boat ahead. The distance by water was a little less than by land, and although Stephen had considerably the start of him, he believed he should be able to reach the school house first, especially if Stephen should not see him and quicken his pace. In one minute after he arrived at the wharf, the boat was under full way.

The boys laid down to the oars with right good will, and Charles put all strength upon the paddle. They were shooting over the water twice as fast as a man could walk, and Charles felt sure of the victory. But when they had gone about half a mile they came in the range of a little opening in the trees on the shore, where the road was exposed to view, and there, at that critical moment, was Stephen, pursuing his easy walk, Charles's heart was in his mouth. Still it was possible Stephen might not see them, for he had not yet looked around. Lest the sound of his oars might attract attention, Charles had instantly on coming in sight, ordered the boys to stop rowing, and he grasped his paddle with breathless anxiety and waited for Stephen again to disappear. But just as he was on the point of passing some trees where the boat would be out of sight, Stephen turned his head and looked around. He stopped short, turned square round, and stood for the space of a minute looking steadily at the boat. Then lifting his hand, and shaking his fist resolutely at Charles, as much as to say I understand you, he started into a quick run.

Now, boys, said Charles, buckle to your oars for your lives, and if you get to the shore so that I can reach the school house before Stephen does, I'll give you a half dollar apiece.

This of course added new life to the boys and increased the speed of the boat. Their little canoe flew over the water like a bird, carying a white bone in her mouth, and leaving a long ripple on the glassy wave behind her. Charles' hand trembled, but still he did good execution with the paddle. Although Stephen upon the run was different from Stephen at a slow walk, Charles had still hopes of winning the race and gaining his point. He several times caught glimpses of Stephen through the trees, and as he could judge the boat had a little the best of it. But when they came into the last opening, where for a little way they had a fair view of each other, Charles thought Stephen ran faster than ever; and although he was now considerably nearer the school house than Stephen was, he still trembled for the result. They were now within fifty rods of the shore, and Charles again appealed to the boys' love of money.

Now, said he, we have not a minute to spare. If we gain the point, I'll give you a dollar a piece.

The boys strained every nerve, and Charles' paddle made the water fly like the tail of a wounded shark. When within half a dozen rods of the shore, Charles urged them again to spring with all their might, and one of the boys making a desperate plunge upon his oar, snapped it in two. The first pull of the other oar headed the boat from land. Charles saw at once that the delay must be fatal, if he depended upon the boat to carry him ashore. The water was three feet deep and the bottom was sandy. He sprang from the boat, and rushed towards the shore as fast as he was able to press through the water. He flew up the bank and along the road until he reached the school house. The door was open, but he could see there was no one within. Several children were at play about the door, who having seen Charles approach, with mouth and eyes wide open, stared at him.

Where's the schoolma'am? said Charles hastily, to one of the largest boys.

Why? said the boy, opening his eyes still wider, is any of the folks dead?

You little rascal, I say, where's the school ma'am?

She just went down the road, said the boy, two or three minutes ago.

Was she alone? said Charles.

She started alone, said the boy, and a man met her out there a little way, and turned about and went with her.

Charles felt that his cake was all dough again, and he might as well give up for a bad job, and go home. Stephen Jones and Lucy Brown walked very leisurely through the woods, and the boys went very leisurely in the boat across the pond. They even stopped by the way and caught a mess of fish, since the boys had thrown their lines into the boat when they started. And when they had reached the wharf, Charles, in order to show that he had been a fishing, took a string of fish in his hand and carried them up to the house. Miss Lucy Brown, on her way through the woods, had undoubtedly been informed of the proposed tea-party for the evening, to which she was to be invited, and to which Stephen Jones and Susan Jones were not invited, and when Lucy's invitation came, she sent word back, that she was engaged.

Damascus Steel.

The term Damascus is applied to a kind of steel which shows a variegated, watery appearance, on the polished surface. It is originally from Asia, and the scimitars, or swords, chiefly from Damascus, where the art of manufacturing blades appears to be best understood. The excellent quality of this cutlery has long been proverbial, no other steel having been found to equal it in tenacity and hardness. The process by which the steel is worked is not known; it is a secret faithfully preserved among those who are engaged in the manufacture. Various artizans and scientific men have endeavored to imitate the oriental damask, but with ill success; the form and appearance of the steel have been imitated, but its quality has never been equaled. French manufacturers, particularly, have wasted a great deal of time and means in such attempts. The probable cause of the superior quality of this steel is in the raw material, the ore; and is probably somewhat attributable to the skill of the artizan.

Imitations of Damascus steel are very numerous, and have been made for the last fifty years; the real value of these imitations, however, is quite limited. Denmark steel has been made and is made of such perfectly developed veins by welding together bundles of small slips of steel and iron, or steel of different kinds, that all imaginable figures that can be delineated by hand have been imitated. The smooth water, the waved water, a torsion of the damask, and the spotted damask, have all been produced—names, letters, inscriptions, leaves and flowers have all been represented—but all these things do not make Damascus blades of equal quality to the genuine.

It appears that the Persian manufacturers do not use so much skill in forging, but depend upon the elements. Recent experiments have shown that when blades are cooled slowly, as by swinging in the air, a damask is produced on steel highly charged with carbon. This, however, is nothing new, as the next best blades to those of oriental manufacture—the blades of Solingen—have been hardened or tempered in that way for centuries; it is, nevertheless, the most perfect mode of hardening steel, where tenacity is also desirable. It is said that one hundred parts of soft iron, and two parts of lamp black, melted together, make a fine steel, of great strength. It is also said that equal parts of cast and wrought iron turnings make a fine steel, of damask quality, which is superior for arms and edged tools. The quality of such imitations must depend, however, upon the quality of the steel, the iron, the cast iron, the lamp black, or the crucibles that are employed.

Trouble.

Trouble becomes a marvellous mortifier of pride, and an effectual restrainer of self-will. The temper is mellowed and the feelings refined. It needs repeated strokes of the hammer to break the rocks to pieces; and so it sometimes requires repeated strokes of anguish to break our hearts to pieces, and make us humbler and wiser men. And as the longer you keep a Canary bird in a cage the sweeter it will sing, so the more severe the discipline of a good man's experience, the sweeter the song of his spiritual life.—The gold that is refined in the hottest furnace comes out the brighest, and the character moulded by intense heat will exhibit the most wondrous excellence.

God's children are like stars, they shine brightest in the darkest night; like torches, that are the better for beating; like grapes, that drive down their roots farther, and grasp the earth tighter by reason of the storm; like vines, that look the better for bleeding; like gold, that looks the better for scouring; like glow worms, that shine best in the dark; like juniper, that smells the sweetest in the fire; like pomander, which becomes more fragrant for chafing; like the palm tree, which proves the better for preserving; like the camomile, which spreads the more you tread upon it.

F. R. S.

The following story respecting the meaning of these important, (and to foreigners) cabalistic initials, is thus related:—

It appears that a certain United States man of eccentric habits, acquired great notoriety from his fondness for oysters, and other testaceous delicacies. This worthy was in the habit of writing after his name, whether upon his card or in the visitors' book at hotels, the mysterious letters, F. R. S.

One morning, a newly-come English gentleman, of middle age and grave aspect, was looking over the list of arrivals. He was struck by the mysterious letters, as every one else had been.

F. R. S. muttered he; it can't be! yet there the letters are! Who would have thought it?

The clerk was called up and questioned to explain. He knew nothing more than that one of the boarders and lodgers had put his name down with that handle attached.

Show him to me! said the Englishman, eagerly.

There he goes, sir, said the clerk, pointing to our hero.

The next moment "Old Shell" felt his hand grasped by another hand, while his arm went through a rapid and vigorous motion, familiarly known as the "pump handle action." It was the Englishman, his face beaming with cordiality.

Delighted to see you, sir! Had not the slightest idea of seeing one of our society on this side of the water! When were you a member? My memory is so defective.

Member of what? asked "Old Shell," half surprised, half angry.

Oh, don't be so modest, my dear sir!

Modest! the deuce! what society?

No bashfulness, now. You are a fellow, I know.

Dash my buttons, stranger! exclaimed "Old Shell," thoroughly indignant; do you call me a fellow?

Fellow of the Royal Society, sir. You mistake my meaning. Fellow of the Royal Society of London.

I am no Londoner, man; I come from down South, I do. I am an oyster-man, I am.

Why, what on earth does F. R. S. mean, then, attached to your name? said the astonished Englishman, science and surprise beaming from his countenance.

Well, stranger, I don't care if I do tell you. You see I like oysters, I do; and F. R. S means exactly nothing more nor less than Fried, Roasted and Stewed!

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, September 17th, 1859.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

THE WEATHER. Has been unusually cold, during the past week, for the season. On Wednesday last, we experienced a blustering wind from the northwest—a real, furious, autumnal blast—scattering the fruit in all directions. The succeeding nights, the foot prints of Jack Frost were visible in our low lands—particularly among the vines and other tender plants. Whether corn, our staple production, is out of harm's way, we do not know. We had rather, however, he had postponed his visit until a later period.

FIREMEN'S RIOT. Quite a serious riot occcured at the Firemen's Muster, Manchester, (N. H.) on Thursday last. The difficulty rose between the Firemen and a nest of gamblers. Pistols were fired, brickbats and other missiles were thrown; several persons were injured—but none it is thought seriously; five houses were partially destroyed and the gamblers completely routed, when peace and quiet was restored.

ORIENTAL MESSENGER. Published at Independence, Missouri. We have received a copy of this paper, through the politeness of our young townsman, Bryant N. Adams, Esq., now a resident of the thriving little village of Kanzas city. It is an interesting sheet, filled up with local and other matter, depicting scenes in Western life, and denoting a degree of prosperity which it is pleasing to learn. The political character of the paper cannot be mistaken; it is a bold, fearless, outspoken Democratic organ, and of course, denounces us poor sinners, in these benighted regions, as a nest of fanatics, bent on mischief and disunion. This, as a general rule, is not true, Mr. Messenger, notwithstanding such an inference may be drawn from the false position in which interested and unprincipled demagogues have placed us. In the main, a majority of our people are sound to the core in their devotion to the Union—and feel an interest in the growth of every section of the country, whether it be North, South, East or West; especially in the virgin State of Missouri, whose rich mines and fertile fields, are attracting to her borders so many of our young and enterprising citizens.

THE WORCESTER CONVENTION. The Democratic Convention which met at Worcester on Thursday last, is reported to be one of the largest and most enthusiastic gatherings which the party has witnessed for many years—eighteen hundred it is estimated were in attendance. The town was crowded to overflowing. Still, order and the best of feeling pervaded the Convention throughout its deliberations. The Ticket, also, which was selected to be supported for the several State offices, it is thought will be a highly popular one. They are all true and sound men—firm and unwavering Democrats: Gen. Benjamin F. Butler, of Lowell, for Governor, Hon. S. C. Bemis, of Springfield, for Lieut. Governor, Samuel W. Bowerman, of Adams, for Secretary of State, George Dennet, of Boston, for State Treasurer, James E. Easterbrook, of Worcester, for Auditor, and David H. Mason, of Newton, for Attorney General. The Delegates to the National Convention, at large, were Hon. Caleb Cushing of Newburyport, Gen. James S. Whitney, of Springfield, Hon. Isaac Davis, of Worcester, and Mr. Oliver Stevens, of Boston.—The ball is now fairly in motion—and our ears will be filled, from this time till November, with the din and noise attending a great political conflict.

REGETTA. One of these sources of amusement, and probably the last of the season, occurs on Monday afternoon next, in the vicinity of the Great Hill House, in this town; and friend Mears, the landlord, will assuredly meet the wants of every one who may be present to witness the contest.

Trip to New York, etc.

SEPT. 8TH, 1859.

While the amiable, fascinating, adorable Fanny was happily sojourning at Lake George, we deemed the moment opportune to go to New York, Brooklyn, and those "diggins," without fear of disturbing any lady's crinoline by our ponderous frame.

Leaving Boston via Old Colony and Fall River railroad, we were especially gratified to notice, that the road this season is very handsomely patronized, by a large share perhaps the largest, of the travelling public to New York, the South and West. From some cause or causes, not well understood, there was a period in which considerable illfeeling was entertained and loudly expressed in public, relative to the management or mismanagement on the part of officers of this road, and in consequence, it obtained but little patronage, and its stock fell below par; but since it has come under the immediate personal supervision and direction of its present indefatigable, able and shrewd President, Alexander Holmes, Esq., order has come out of chaos, a sound and judicious management prevails, its stock commands ready sale at a premium, and is considered the best of any road leading out of Boston. So much for the right man in the right place.

Arriving at Fall River, fifty-three miles from Boston, the shortest land tack, at seven P. M., we took passage on the Steamer Metropolis, the largest and most magnificent steamer plying the waters of Long Island Sound. We took tea on board at eight o'clock, walked the deck half an hour, and retired to bed at nine o'clock, pleased with the selection we had made of en route—as the shortest land route, and possessing the least inconveniences and discomforts to the traveller, such as being routed out in the night for change of cars to steamer and vice versa, and landing at New York too early in the morning—while, on the other hand by this route, travellers reach the city early enough for breakfast, and a continuation in any direction of their journey.

The Metropolis is commanded by Capt. Wm. Brown, an "old sea dog," and who has been many years in command of steamers on the Sound. He is a strict disciplinarian, attentive to all his duties, kind and courteous—a gentleman in every true sense of the word. As evidence of his personal popularity and the popularity of his boat, every State room, and birth, and sleeping space, was occupied on that trip; and we learned that such was the case on almost every trip thus far this season.

The first night in New York, we put up at the Dey Street House, where we received every kind attention from "mine host" of that popular hotel, conducted on the European plan. But the next morning, finding ourselves seized with aggravated force and energy by the malady from which we have for many years suffered, and which has baffled the skill of the best physicians to cure, we sought accommodations at the private residence of an old and valued friend, who kindly received us, and through those attentions and those of his most excellent consort, as also those of the eminent physician, Dr. Benedict, the di-ease was conquered, and we returned to convalescence in a few days. Our thanks we thus publicly tender to those friends for their sympathy, their labors of love, and good management, which so largely contributed to our restoration to health, and return to our accustomed pursuits.

Weak and feeble, the object of out visit, business and pleasure, was denied us. All we were enabled to see was a great number of people passing on the street; and general indications was that business was dull enough. As soon as we were physically able, we returned home by the same route, steamer Metropolis and the Old Colony and Fall River railroad.

FOURTH REGIMENT. In addition to the just tribute paid by our Boston Correspondent, in his communication of last week, to the high military character and discipline of this favorite regiment, we feel it a duty as well as a pleasure, in consequence of the numerous commendations which come rolling in upon us from all quarters, to allude once more to the subject. Col. Packard has won golden opinions, as an officer of rare qualities, from some of the best critics on military affairs in the country; and his regiment a character of which they may be justly proud. May they long continue to wear them.

CARPETS. The New England Carpet Company, of Boston, are supplying the people with carpets, at low prices. Read their announcement in the advertising columns of to-day's paper.

PEOPLE'S FREE SCHOOL CONVENTION. A Mass Meeting of the citizens of Norfolk County, opposed to the late act of the Legislature in regard to our School District System, and in favor of a division of the State School fund, among the citizens of the Commonwealth, in proportion to the number of children of legal school ages, and also for the repeal of all laws which obstruct the right of School Districts to supervise their own affairs, will be held at the Phœnix Hotel, Dedham, on Wednesday, Sept. 2, at 10 o'clock, A. M. A spirited circular, calling the attention of the people to the subject, is now being spread over the County.

Boston Correspondence.

Boston, Sept. 15, 1859.

Financial matters—Specie; its influence on Trade.—Statistical items in reference to the Precious Metals — Amount. — Exportation — Yearly consumption. — Its Export injurious to Trade—The Great Eastern Steamship; her Immense Size.—Anticipated Grand Reception—A Jubilee at Portland.

Two of the ocean steamers sailed from New York since my last for Europe, taking out three hundred and sixty passengers and one million six hundred thousand dollars in specie. Exhausting the country of a million of the precious metals each week, what would be its financial condition by the ensuing spring. It cannot be disguised that gold and silver are the true balance wheels of the money market. Their presence when abundant secures confidence in all branches of business, and controls a healthy influence on bank issues. A continual drain of specie from the country, will in the end, place the banks in such embarrassing condition, that when their paper is the most sought after, to accommodate the business wants, they grow powerless in proportion to the exportation of specie to foreign lands. Within ten years some nine hundred millions in gold and silver have been developed in California and Australia; no small portion of which, have found their way to the United States. By the policy of our government, or the theory of banking reduced to practice, two-thirds of all the precious metals that have been brought into the United States for ten years past, have taken wings and fled to Europe; so that the foreign exports beyond imports, has been during this decemnal period, three hundred and five million of dollars. What remedies can be suggested for this impoverishment, which continually occurs by means of our foreign trade? In plain words, how can we keep the specie in our own country? It is a question for political economists to answer. The Chinese perforate a square hole in the centre of their coin; it answers a double purpose; they can be strung and carried in safety; and other nations are not willing to receive them thus mutilated, by way of trade, although they are a legal tender in China. American coins are probably more alloyed than those of any other commercial country. The remedy could not be reached by further alloy.

The suppression of all bank bills for circulation under a denomination of five dollars would do some good; under ten dollars, more good. But this is not popular, at least in Massachusetts, and would be voted down instanter in the Legislature.

The annual production of gold and silver throughout the world has been shown by the latest reliable investigations, to be $206,984 000. The yearly consumption, to be twelve millions sterling in the arts, seven and a half millions sterling by loss and abrasion of coins, and ten millions hoarded up in Europe and Asia.

To retain more specie in our country, partial remedies are apparent; there should be less paper issues, and in small transactions, a more general use of specie. We should do by other nations as they do to us—require the balance of trade in hard money. That vessel generally makes the best voyage, where the cargo is sold abroad for gold and silver and brought home to its owners, returning on freight with foreign shipment, which a good vessel can always command in a foreign port of any commercial importance. The carrying trade of the world can in a great measure be effected by American shipping. I repeat, that it is a question involving the nicest principles of political science, to answer, what shall we do to keep a large portion of specie in our land, that flows out of it by each weekly steamer and to the great detriment of business men?

I spoke in my last of the visit of the Great Eastern Steamship to Portland during the present month. There is much talk here concerning her. By experienced Pilots, it is said the waters of Boston Harbor are sufficiently deep for her. Her owners have doubts as to the capacity of our channel for her safe entrance here. Her size is immense, being nineteen thousand tons, and six hundred and eighty feet long—over one eighth of a mile. The next largest steamer is the General Admiral, six thousand tons. The other great ocean steamers hardly averaging three thousand tons. The Great Eastern is one of the wonders of the age; to examine, well worth a journey to Portland. She will probably arrive there on Friday of next week. Her reception will be on a grand scale. A public dinner and ball are to be given under the direction of the citizens of Portland; salutes to be fired; the bells to be rung and the public buildings to be decorated—with a general illumination in the evening. The military to turn out, and about all the great folks in the United States and Canada invited to be present, including the President of the United States; General Scott, the Governors of all the States in the Union, and the high officials of Canada. And all to visit this Eighth Wonder of the world.

I am prevented for want of space to make any allusions to the local events of the week in our city. x.

ELECTRIC SPARKS FROM THE BATTLE-FIELD. The following scintilations were received, by telegraph, from Camp Massachusetts, at Concord, on the last day of the encampment; they were transmitted by a young man who performed a veteran's service on that memorable occasion. He saw the Elephant, likewise his Excellency.—Glory enough for one campaign.

has now engaged a force of talent that cannot be rivaled by any establishment in the world.

Notices of the Press,

Never before has any new candidate for public favor in the Literary World received such flattering notices from the Press. From all quarters, our editorial brethren have cheered us on by speaking of our enterprise in a manner to stimulate our vanity, and to excite the envy of our rivals.

GENERAL CHARACTER
OF THE NEW YORK WEEKLY.
The WEEKLY is designed more especially as
A FIRST-CLASS STORY PAPER,
in which we intend to give our readers a succession of the Best Stories ever published in the United States! The aim and object of these productions will be to inculcate useful knowledge under the pleasing guise of fiction, or to teach great moral lessons through the same means. We shall never publish a work or line, the tendency of which is to injure the morals or taste of the reader. Every issue of the New York Weekly will contain short Sketches of Life and Manners, Notices of Travel and Adventure, Short Stories, General Summary of Events, Humorous Gleanings, Poetry, Editorials, &c. &c. &c.
As specimens of our serials, we would point to
A. J. H. DUGANNE'S Great Story
GARIBALDI,
THE HERO OF ITALY.
HARRY HAZEL'S
EXCITING INDIAN ROMANCE,
THE MUTE SPY!
FRANCIS S. SMITH'S
INTENSELY INTERESTING DOMESTIC STORY,
MAUDE,
THE CHILD OF CHARITY!
While, as specimens of our standing departments, we point with pride to
OUR BALLADS OF THE BIBLE,
admitted by all to be the most chastely written and beautiful scriptural poems ever produced.
OUR KNOWLEDGE BOX,
in which is weekly contained a number of paragraphs of the greatest importance to house keepers and others.
OUR PLEASANT PARAGRAPHS,
an interesting melange, ranging "from grave to gay, from lively to severe."
OUR LADIES' COLUMN,
prepared especially for the ladies by one of the most brilliant lady writers of the present day
OUR MIRTHFUL MORSELS,
OUR ITEMS OF INTEREST,
etc., etc., etc.
In a word, its Editors will use their best endeavors to get up just such a paper as will eventually find its way to every fireside in the land—that shall be a welcome visitor wherever it goes—equally popular in the work-shop and the office—at the fireside of the farmer, or in the counting-room of the merchant—a paper that parents can, with safety, place in the hands of their children without note or comment, feeling certain that its influence will be to stimulate their minds to the pursuit of knowledge, or lead them to abhor vice and wrong.

Our Circulation and Prospects

The NEW YORK WEEKLY has gone up to a circulation which places it second in point of circulation in the list of publications of the day. There is but one weekly publication in the world having a larger circulation than the WEEKLY. The indications are, at present, that the circulation of the WEEKLY will soon reach half a million.—Where the newsmen were taking tens, they are now taking hundreds of copies. This is the general effect among the Five Thousand News Agents who are now selling the NEW YORK WEEKLY, while from nearly every Post Office in the country, we are daily getting subscriptions and orders for specimens.

How and where to get the Weekly.

Wherever there is a News Agent, get the paper from him. By so doing you do not run the risk of losing your money through the Post Office, or having to pay for what you will never get. If the paper you are buying from the Agent stops, you do not lose advance subscriptions, sent to a place where you have no means of looking after it. We trust the day is not far distant when every town, large enough to sustain a Post Office, will have its News Agency.

OUR TERMS.
The price of the NEW YORK WEELY FOUR CENTS, but where Agents have to pay extra freight or postage, a higher price is necessarily charged. When sent by mail, the price will invariably be $2 a year, in advance. Subscriptions taken for three months. Two copies will be sent for one year for $3, four copies for $6, eight copies for $12. Postmasters and others who get up clubs of ten, and send us $15 at one time, will be entitled to an extra copy for their trouble. The bills of all solvent banks taken at par for subscriptions. Canada subscribers must send twenty-five cents extra with every subscription, to pre-pay the American postage.
All letters and communications, in relation to the Editorial or Business Departments of the NEW YORK WEEKLY, must be addressed to

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

A compound remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Para Sarsaparilla, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from Strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found of the following complaints:—
SCROFULA AND SCROFULOUS COMPLAINTS, ERUPTIONS AND ERUPTIVE DISEASES, ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES, TUMORS, SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, SYPHILIS AND SYPHILITIC AFFECTIONS, MERCURIAL DISEASE, DROPSY, NEURALGIA OR TIC DOULOUREUX, DEBILITY, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, ERYSIPELAS, ROSE OR ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, and indeed the whole class of complaints arising from IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD.
This compound will be found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the foul humors which fester in the blood at that season of the year. By the timely expulsion of them many rankling disorders are nipped in the bud. Multitudes can, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerous sores, through which the system will strive to rid itself of corruptions, if not assisted to do this through the natural channels of the body by an alterative medicine. Cleanse out the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, or sores; cleanse it when you find it is obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Even where no particular disorder is felt, people enjoy better health, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. Keep the blood healthy, and all is well; but with this pabulum of life disordered, there can be no lasting health. Sooner or later something must go wrong, and the great machinery of life is disordered or overthrown.
Sarsaparilla has, and deserves much, the reputation, of accomplishing these ends. But the world has been egregiously deceived by preparations of it, partly because the drug alone has not all the virtue that is claimed for it, but more because many preparations, pretending to be concentrated extracts of it, contain but little of the virtue of Sarsaparilla, or any thing else.
During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter and painful disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself is justly despised, and has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound Sarsaparilla, and intend to supply such a remedy as shall resene the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. And we think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. In order to secure their complete eradication from the system, the remedy should be judiciously taken according to directions on the bottle.
PREPARED BY
DR. J. C. AYER & CO.
LOWELL, MASS.
Price, $1 per Bottle; Six Bottles for $5.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

has won for itself such a renown for the cure of every variety of Throat and Lung Complaint, that it is entirely unnecessary for us to recount the evidence of its virtues, wherever it has been employed. As it has long been in constant use throughout this section, we need not do more than assure the people its quality is kept up to the best it ever has been, and that it may be relied on to do for their relief all it has ever been found to do.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR THE CURE OF
Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach, Erysipelas, Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Tetter, Tumors and Salt Rheum, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, as a Dinner Pill, and for Purifying the Blood.
They are sugar-coated, so that the most sensitive can take them pleasantly, and they are the best aperient in the world for all the purposes of a family physic.
Price 25 cents per Box; Five boxes for $1.00.
Great numbers of Clergymen, Physicians, Statesmen, and eminent personages, have lent their names to certify the unparalleled usefulness of these remedies, but our space here will not permit the insertion of them. The Agents below named furnish gratis our AMERICAN ALMANAC in which they are given; with also full descriptions of the above complaints, and the treatment that should be followed for their cure.
Do not be put off by unprincipled dealers with other preparations they make more profit on. Demand AYER'S, and take no others. The sick want the best aid there is for them, and they should have it.
All our Remedies are for sale by
Mrs. E. HAYDEN, and all Medicine Dealers.

Poetry.

For the Patriot

Gabriel Puzzled.

BY F. M. ADLINGTON.

Arch Gabriel feeling quite lonesome one day,
Bestrode a bright thought and to earth took his way,
Says he, I must look round and find out the news,
I go for the latest, which place shall I choose?
He soon found an office, the Herald's I think,
And passing the devil sat down in a chink;
He took up a paper, saw vote upon vote,
And speeches in praise of one dead lawyer, Choate.
How's this exclaimed Gabriel, he died such a day,
And must have gone up before I came away:
'Tis strange it should happen and I not to know,
So Sawny like, back to enquire I'll go.
Remounting his thought he soon reached Heaven's gate,
And there found St. Peter presiding in state.
Says Gabriel, friend Peter, pray tell me my dear
If one lawyer Choate has of late entered here?
St. Peter looked up with a comical stare,
Friend Gabriel d'you think to find lawyers in there?
Says Gabriel, pray send down a runner to see
If perchance he has stopped down in purgatory.
The messenger went and returned to declare,
That no lawyer Choate had found lodging down there.
Says Peter, to see him if much you desire,
I think of the lawyers t were best to inquire,
For birds of a feather—you know, oh, ahem!
I think it most likely you'll find him with them.

The Sorrows of the Poor

The poor man hath a lonely lot,
To misery allied:
His very being is forgot
Among the sons of pride.
He rises with the morning light,
And labors through the weary night,
A scanty meal to gain;
Then lays his weary head to rest,
But anxious cares disturb his breast—
To slumber is in vain!

The cold neglect, the withering scorn,
That meet him on his way,
The spirit bowed, and sinews worn,
By premature decay,—
A brow o'ershadowed by despair,
The trembling gait produced by care,
The constant dread of ill:—
These mingle with his very dream,
And hope hath no consoling gleam
To pleasant thoughts instil!

Alas! to him the changeful earth
Hath features ever sad;
For when the summer wakes its mirth,
He only is not glad.
For what too him is Nature's smile,
That may another's heart beguile,
But cannot pierce the shed
Where he is wasting life away,
Unheedful of the night or day,
So long it brings him bread!

God's blessing on the verdant fields,
When sunshine dwelleth there!
And every flower that fragrance yields
Becomes more sweetly fair!
In truth 'tis beautiful to view!
But ripening corn and violet's hue
Are hidden from the poor!
They cannot watch the season's change,
To them all blithesome scenes are strange,
Their sense of joy is o'er!

Within a close and fetid room,
Through sickness and in age,
They labor on, and pass in gloom
Their life's declining stage.
The slaves of want! while those who have,
And from the depths of woe could save,
Evade their haggard mein,
Nor mark the signet death hath placed,
Where many a sorrow could be traced,
And painful years be seen!

The poor! O, mock not those who weep,
The wretched and the lone!
For heaven doth surely record keep,
When earthly aid is gone;
And at the bridal feast the guest
May be the mortal leastwise blessed
Among his fellows here.
Then cheer the poor man's solitude,
And smooth the briars on his road
To kindlier lands elsewhere!

Familiar Tone.

'Twas his own voice, she could not err;
Throughout the breathing world's extent,
There was but one such voice for her,
So kind, so soft, so eloquent,
Oh! sooner shall the Rose of May
Mistake her own sweet Nightingale,
And to some meaner minstrel's lay
Open her bosom's glowing veil,
Than Love shall ever doubt a tone,
A breath of the beloved one.

Anecdotes.

A man was arraigned for stealing a demijohn of whiskey.

Are you guilty or not guilty? asked the clerk.

Wal, yu can call it what you like, I tuk the whisker, that I admit, and drank it, too.

You took it without leave, did you not?

I never wait to be asked when that article is around.

There are some members of a community, said the sagacious and witty Thomas Bradbury, that are like a crumb in the throat: if they go the right way, they afford but little nourishment; but if they happen to go the wrong way, they give a deal of trouble.

An honest old lady, when told of her cousin's death exclaimed,—

Well, I do declare, our troubles never come alone! It ain't a week since I lost my best hen, and now dear Tom has gone too, poor man!

Agnes Molesworth.

Dignity, a mild and gentle, but still a most striking dignity, was the prime characteristic of Agnes Molesworth, in look and mind. Her beauty was the beauty of sculpture, as contra-distinguished from that of painting; depending mainly on form and expression, little on color. There could hardly be a stronger contrast than existed between the purity of her finely-grained complexion, the softness of her deep gray eye, the calm composure of her exquisitely moulded features, and the rosy cheeks, the brilliant glances, and the playful animation of Jessy. In a word, Jessy was a pretty girl, and Agnes was a beautiful woman. Of these several facts, both sisters were, of course, perfectly aware: Jessy, because every body told her so—and she must have been dead to escape the knowledge; Agnes, from some process equally certain but less direct; for few would have ventured to take the liberty of addressing a personal compliment to one evidently too proud to take pleasure in anything so nearly resembling flattery and praise.

Few, excepting her looking-glass or her father, had ever told Agnes that she was handsome, and yet she was as conscious of her surpassing beauty, as Jessie of her sparkling prettiness; and perhaps as a mere question of appearance and becomingness, there might have been as much coquetry in the severe simplicity of attire and of manner which might distinguish one sister, as in the elaborate adornment and innocent showing-off of the other. There was, however, between them, exactly such a difference of taste and character, as the outward show served to indicate. Both were true, gentle, good and kind; but the elder was as much loftier in mind as in stature, had abandoned drawing from feeling herself dissatisfied with her performances, as compared with the works of real artists; reserved her musical taste entirely for her domestic circle, because she put too much soul into that delicious art, to make it a mere amusement, and she was only saved from becoming a poetess, by her almost exclusive devotion to the very great in poetry—to Wordsworth, to Milton and Shakspeare. These tastes she very wisely kept to herself, but they gave a higher and firmer tone to her character and manners; and more than one peer when seated at Mr. Molesworth's hospitable table, has thought within himself how well his beautiful daughter would become a coronet.

Marriage, however, seemed little in her thoughts. Once or twice, indeed her kind father had pressed on her the brilliant establishments that had offered: but her sweet questions, "Are you tired of me? Do you wish me away? had always gone straight to his heart, and put aside, for the moment, the ambition of his nature even in this, his favorite child.

Of Jessy, with all her youthful attractions, he had always been less proud, perhaps less fond. Besides, her destiny he had long in his own mind considered as decided. Charles Woodford, a young relation, brought up by his kindness, recently returned into his family from a great office in London, was the person on whom he had long ago fixed for the husband of his youngest daughter, and for his immediate partner and eventful successor to his great and flourishing business: a choice that seemed fully justified by the excellent conduct and by the apparently good understanding, and mutual affection that subsisted between the young people.

This arrangement was the more agreeable to, as, providing munificently for Jessy; it also allowed him the privilege of making, as in lawyer phrase, he used to boast, "an elder son" of Agnes, who would become one of the richest heiresses in the country. He had even in his own mind, selected her future spouse in the person of a young baronet who had lately been much at the house, and in favor of whose expected addressses, (for the proposal had not yet been made—the gentleman had gone no further than attentions,) he had determined to exert the paternal authority which had so long lain dormant.

But in the affairs of love, as in all others, man is born to disappointment. L'homme propose et Dieu dispose, is never truer than in the great matter of matrimony. So found poor Mr. Molesworth, who—Jessy having arrived at the age of eighteen, Charles at the age of two-and-twenty—offered his pretty daughter and the lucrative partnership to his penniless relation and was petrified with astonishment and indignation to find the connection very respectfully, but very firmly declined. The young man was very much distressed and agitated; he had the highest respect for Miss Jessy, but he could not marry her—he loved another! And then he poured forth a confidence as unexpected as it was undesired by his incensed patron, who left him in undiminished wrath and increased perplexity.

This interview had taken place immediately after breakfast; and when the conference was ended the provoked father sought his daughters, who, happily unconscious of all that had occurred, were amusing themselves in the splendid observatory—a scene always as becoming as it is agreeable to youth and beauty. Jessy was flitting about like a butterfly among fragrant orange trees and bright geraniums. Agnes was standing under a superb fuschia that hung over a marble basin, her form and attitude, her white dress and the classical arrangement of her dark hair, giving her the look of some nymph or naiad, a rare relict of the Grecian art. Jessy was prattling gaily, as she wandered about, of a concert which she attended the evening before, at a country town.

I hate concerts, said the pretty little flirt, to sit bolt upright on a hard bench four long hours, between the same four people, without the possibility of moving, or of speaking to anybody, or of anybody's getting to us! Oh, how tiresome it is!

I saw Sir Edmund trying to glide through the crowd to reach you, said Agnes, a little archly; his presence would, perhaps, have mitigated the evil. But the barricade was too complete, he was forced to retreat without accomplishing his object.

Yes, I assure you, he thought it very tiresome; he told me so when we were coming out. And then the music! pursued Jessy; the noise, they called it music! Sir Edmund says he likes no music except the guitar, or a flute on the water; and I like none except your playing on the organ, and singing Handel on a Sunday evening, or Charles Woodford's reading Milton and bits of Hamlet.

Do you call that music? asked Agnes laughing. And yet, continued she, it is most truly so, with his rich Pater-like voice, and his fine sense of sound; and to you who do not greatly love poetry for its own sake, it is doubtless a pleasure much resembling in kind the hearing the most thrilling of instruments. I, myself, have felt such a gratification in hearing him recite the verses of Homer or of Sophocles in the original Greek. Charles Woodford's reading is music.

It is music which you are neither of you likely to hear again, interrupted Mr. Molesworth, advancing suddenly towards them: for he has been ungrateful and I have discarded him!

Agnes stood as if petrified: Ungrateful! Oh, father.

You can't have discarded him, to be sure, papa, said Jessy, always good natured, poor Charles! what can he have done?

Refused your hand, my child, said the angry parent, refused to be my partner and son-in-law, and fallen in love with another young lady! What have you to say for him now?

Why, really, papa, replied Jessy, I am much more obliged to him for refusing my hand, than to you for offering it. I like Charles very well for a cousin, but I should not like such a husband at all; so that if this refusal be the worst that has happened, there is no great harm done. And off the Gipsey ran, declaring that she must put on her habit, for she had promised to ride with Sir Edmund and his sister, and expected them every minute.

The father and daughter remained in the conservatory.

That heart is untouched, however, said Mr. Molesworth, looking after her with a smile.

Untouched by Charles Woodford, undoubtedly, replied Agnes, but has he really refused my sister?

Absolutely.

And does he love another?

He says so, and I believe him.

Is he loved again?

That he did not say.

Did he tell you the name of the lady?

Yes.

Is she worthy of him?

Most worthy.

Has he any hope of gaining her affections? Oh! he must! he must! what woman could refuse him?

He is determined not to try. The lady whom he loves is above him in every way, and much as he has counteracted my wishes, it is an honorable part of Charles Woodford's conduct that he intends to leave his affection unsuspected by its object.

Here ensued a short pause in the dialogue, during which Agnes appeared to be collecting the blossoms on a Cape Jessamine, and watering a favorite Geranium, but it would not do, the subject was at her heart, and she could not force her mind to indifferent occupations. She returned to her father, who had been anxiously watching her motions, and the varying expressions of her countenance, and resumed the conversation.

Father! perhaps it is hardly maiden like to avow so much, but although you have never in set words told me your intentions, I have yet seen and known, I can hardly tell how, all that your kind partiality toward me has designed for your children. You have mistaken me, dearest father, doubly mistaken me: First, in thinking me fit to fill a splendid place in society, next in imagining that I desired such splendor. You meant to give Jessy and the lucrative partnership to Charles Woodford, and designed me and your large possessions for our wealthy and titled neighbor. And with some little change of person these arrangements may still, for the most part, hold good. Sir Edmund may still be your son-in-law, and your heir, for he loves Jessy, and Jessy loves him. Charles Woodford may still be your partner and adopted son, for nothing has chanced that need diminish your affection or his merit. Marry him to the woman he loves. She must be ambitious indeed, if she be not content with her destiny. And let me live with you, dear father, single and unwedded, with no other thought but to contribute to your comfort, to cheer and brighten your declining years. Do not let your too great fondness for me stand in the way of their happiness. Make me not so odious to them and to myself, dear father! Let me live always with you, and for you—always your own poor Agnes! And blushing at the earnestness with which she had spoken, she bent her head over the marble basin, whose water reflected her fair image, as if she had really been the Grecian statue, to which, whilst he listened, her fond father's fancy had compared her. Let me live single with you, and marry Charles to the woman whom he loves.

Have you heard the name of the lady in question? Have you formed any guess whom she may be?

Not the slightest; I imagined from what you said, that she was a stranger to me. Have I ever seen her.

You may see her reflection in the water at this very moment; for he had the infinite presumption, the admirable good taste, to fall in love with his cousin Agnes!

Father!

And now, my own sweetest? do you still wish to live single with me?

Oh, father! father!

Or do you desire that I shall marry Charles to the woman of his heart?

Father! dear father!

Choose, my Agnes! It shall be as you command. Speak freely. Do not cling so around me, but speak!

Oh, my dear father! Cannot we all live together? I cannot leave you. But poor Charles—surely, father, we may all live together.

And so it was settled; and a very few months proved that Cupid had contrived better for Mr. Molesworth than he had contrived for himself. Jessy, with her prettiness and title, and her fopperies, was the very thing to visit for a day; but Agnes and the cousin, whose noble character and splendid talents so well deserved her, made the pride and happiness of her home.

Useful Receipts.

Erysipelas, a disease often coming without premonition, and ending fatally within three or four days, is sometimes promptly cured by applying a poultice of raw cranberries, pounded and placed on the part over night.

Costive bowels have an agreeable remedy in the use of tomatoes at meals—their seed acting the way of seeds of white mustard or figs, by stimulating the coats of the bowels, over which they pass in their whole state, to increased action. A remedy of equal efficacy in the same direction is cracked wheat—that is, common white wheat grains, broken in two or three pieces, and then boiled until it is as soft as rice, and eaten mainly at two meals of the day, with butter or molasses.

Common sweet cider, boiled down to one half, makes a most excellent syrup for coughs and colds for children; is pleasant to the taste, and will keep throughout the year in a cold cellar.

In recovering from an illness, the system has a craving for some pleasant acid drink. This is found in cider, which is placed on the fire as made, and allowed to come to a boil, then cooled, put in casks, and kept in a cool cellar. Treated thus, it remains many months as good as the day it was made.

We once saved the life of an infant which had been inadvertantly drugged with laudanum, and was fast sinking into the sleep from which there is no wakening, by giving it strong coffee, cleared with the white of an egg, a teaspoonful every five minutes, until it ceased to feel drowsy.—Hall's Journal of Health.

The Doctor Outwitted

An eclectic physician who was lecturing on the laws of health, and particularly on the evils of tea and coffee, happened to meet one morning at the breakfast table, a witty son of Erin, of the better class. Conversation turned on the doctor's favorite subject; he addressed our Irish friend as follows:

Perhaps you think that I would be unable to convince you of the deleterious effects of tea and coffee?

I don't know, said Erin, but I'd like to be there when you do it!

Well, said the doctor, if I convince you that they are injurious to your health, will you abstain from their use?

Sure, and I will, sir.

How often do you use coffee and tea? asked the doctor.

Morning and night, sir.

Well, said the doctor, do you ever experience a slight dizziness of the brain on going to bed?

I do; indeed I do, replied Erin.

And a sharp pain through the temples, in and about the eyes, in the morning?

Troth I do, sir.

Well, said the doctor, with an air of confidence and assurance in his manner, that is the tea and coffee.

Is it indeed? Faith and I always thought it was the whiskey I drank.

The company roared with laughter, and the doctor quietly retired. He was beaten.

Eccentric Men

Eccentric men in great part are little better than fools. Eccentricity rarely comes by Nature, and when it does it is a defect, not a virtue; but when it is an affectation it becomes absurd. Every community has its pretenders whose shallowness every sensible man sees through and despises. This trying to be different from others: this affectation of manners, dress and speech but indicates a want of common sense. Those who are guilty of this pretension, of course do not see the absurd spectacle they present. They are, however, generally rated about right. The eccentric man in a country village, is a tissue of conceit, ignorance and imbecility. The character is bettered very little in large towns and cities. The moment a man begins to be eccentric he should at once go to his friends for advice, just as when he is sick he goes to the physician. But he does nothing of the sort. He believes himself wiser than others, and therefore too wise to learn. The entire vacuum in his head appears a complete fulness. Parents who have boys or girls in which this dangerous absurdity appears should at once take it out of them, let the means be ever so severe.

Man's Moral Worth.

A man's moral worth is not to be graduated by his negative virtues—the evil he merely refrains from doing—but by the amount of temptation he overcomes. He is not to be judged by his defeats alone but also by his victories. Many a man passes through life without a spot on his character, who, notwithstanding, never struggled so bravely as he who fell and was disgraced. The latter may have called to his aid more principle, resisted more evil, before he yielded, than the former, either from circumstances or his physical condition, was ever called to. It would be as unnatural—it would require as great an effort for the cold phlegmatic and passionless being to be vehement, wild and head-long, as for the fiery and tempestuous man to be quiet and motionless. Victory is nothing. It depends upon the nature of the conflict and the odds overcome. Greater generalship, cooler bravery, and loftier effort may be shown in one defeat than in an hundred victories. We have no patience with those moralists of mere animal organization, who place the finest wrought spirits God ever let visit the earth on their iron bedstead, and stretch and clip according to the simple rule of long measure. A higher and juster standard is needed.

A Word to Apprentices.

Apprenticeship is the most important stage of life through which a mechanic is called to pass; it is emphatically the spring season of his days—the time when he is sowing the seed, the fruits of which he is to reap in after years. If he spares no labor in its proper culture, he is sure of obtaining an abundant harvest; but if, in the culture of the mental soil, he follows the example of many in tilling the earth, and carelessly and negligently does his work, like them, he will find the seeding time past, and his ground only bringing forth weeds and briers. Let the young apprentice bear in mind, when he commences learning any business, that all hope of success in the future are doomed to fade away, like the morning mist, unless he improve the golden season. Let him bear in mind that he can become master of his business only through the closest application and the most persevering industry, and that unless he does master it, he may bid farewell to all visions of future prospects and success. The apprenticeship is the foundation of the great mechanical edifice; and surely, if the foundation of a structure be not firm, the structure itself crumbles and falls to earth. Then, young friends, persevere; be studious and attentive; study well all the branches of your business, both practical and theoretical—and when time shall cease for you to take an active part in life, you will not fail to be of use, not only in your own particular business, but in society.

Hardening of Steel.

The usual method of hardening steel is to heat it to a certain point, and then plunge it suddenly into cold water, tempering it afterward. This method is undoubtedly the correct one; but the degree of heat to which steel is to be exposed before cooling, is a matter of great importance. Some steel—the natural, for instance—will bear a strong white heat, and a plunge into cold water, before it assumes its greatest hardness. Other steel, particularly fine cast steel, will not bear more than a brown or cherry red heat—beyond that point it burns, and becomes brittle in hardening. It may safely be concluded, that steel which does not bear heat in forging, will not bear it in hardening.—The heat at which steel falls to pieces, or melts, is too high for hardening, as it will fly or crack. The alterations manifest in steel after hardening, as compared with annealed iron, are the following:

Its volume is a little increased; the black scales which adhere to its surface fly off, and the surface appears clean, and of the color and lustre of iron; the fracture is brighter, and crystals are visible. Good steel is silver white, and is so hard that it will scratch paneglass, and even a file. The cohesion, relative and absolute, is increased if the heat has not been too high before cooling. These are the chief characteristics of good steel, when hardened. Hardening by sudden cooling is a phenomenon not peculiar to steel; it belongs to all the alloys of metals, but is perhaps more characteristic of iron. There is not a bar of puddled iron sold which does not show all the phenomenon of hardening and tempering, as clearly as they are perceived in steel. Most of the charcoal iron, particularly the hot blast, shows the same phenomenon. There is no difference in kind, but in degree.

Variety in Creation

There are thirty-six thousand species of plants exhibited in the Museum of Natural History in Paris. The whole number of species in earth and sea cannot be less than four or five hundred thousand. These are of all sizes, from the invisible forests in a bit of mouldiness, to the towering trees of Malapar, fifty feet in circumference, and the banyans whose shoots cover a circumference of five acres. Each of these has a complicated system of vessels for the circulation of its juices. Some trees have leaves narrow and short; others—as the Talipot of Ceylon—have leaves so large that one of them can shelter fifteen or twenty men. Some exceviate their leaves annually, as a whole robe, leaving the tree nude, its bare stem towering aloft and its branches spreading themselves uncovered in the sky; while the leaves of others drop off one by one, new ones constantly growing in place of the dismembered ones, and the trees retaining its perpetual verdure.

There have actually been ascertained, in the animal kingdom, about sixty thousand species of living creatures. There are six hundred species of mammalia—those that suck their young—the most of which are quadrupeds. Of birds there are four thousand species; of fishes, three thousand; of reptiles, seven hundred; and of insects, forty-four thousand species. Besides these are three thousand species of shell-fish, and not less than eighty or one hundred thousand species of animalculæ invisible to the naked eye!

Cultivation of the Voice.

It has already been observed that the relative strength or weakness of the voice depends partly on the capacity of the lungs, and the general condition of the vocal apparatus, and partly on the number of muscles thrown into action. Experience has also proved that the respiratory organs and the vocal muscles are not only as susceptible of a high degree of development as other portions of our frame, but even to a higher degree. The cultivation of the voice is, however, required on grounds altogether irrespective of the art of singing or public speaking. It is, indirectly, perhaps, the most important branch of physical education; for the amount of vital power depends chiefly on the health and vigor of the respiratory process, the regulation of which must be the first step in the cultivation of the voice.

Parents are not generally aware how much might be effected by a proper mode of physical training in those constitutions where the chest is narrow, indicating a predisposition to pulmonary disease. In all such cases regularly repeated deep inspirations are of paramount value. On account of the elasticity of all the parts concerned, the expansion of the chest is in early childhood easily effected; the capacity of the lungs is increased, and the tendency to disease is counteracted.

There should be a sufficient pause between the acts of inspiration and expiration. In order that children should perform these chest exercises slowly, regularly, and effectually, they require to be carefully watched, guided and encouraged; for they soon get tired of them when left to themselves. Even adults will derive considerable benefit if, immediately after rising, they regularly, for sometime, take deep inspirations, in order that the whole lungs may be properly inflated; and then retain the breath as long as possible. The body must be in an erect position, and the shoulders thrown back. It may also be observed that these exercises are best performed in the open air, or at least, in a well-ventilated room, the windows being open for the time.—The Philosophy of Voice and Speech.

The Trade of Tea-Tasting.

The death of a famous tea-broker, lately, calls to mind the curious nature of his business. Doubtless there are many who are ignorant of the fact that their fastidiousness in the choice of the herb which cheers but not inebriates, is the cause of the establishment of a profession—called "tea-tasting,"—which is as certain death to a man as the continued practice of opium eating. The success of a tea-broker, or taster, depends upon the trained accuracy of the nose and palate, his experience in the wants of the American market, and a keen business tact. If he has the qualities in high cultivation, he may make from thirty to forty thousand dollars per annum, while he lives, and die of ulceration of the lungs. He overhauls a cargo of tea, classifies it, and determines the value of each sort. In doing this, he first looks at the color of the leaf and the general cleanliness of it. He next takes a quantity of the herb in his hand, and breathing his warm breath upon it, he snuffs up the fragrance. In doing this, he draws into his lungs a quantity of irritating and stimulating dust, which is by no means wholesome. Then sitting down at the table in his office, on which is a long row of little porcelain cups and a pot of hot water, he draws the tea and tastes the infusion. In this way he classifies the different sorts to the minutest shade, marks the different prices, and is then ready to compare his work with the invoice. The skill of these tasters is fairly marvellous, but the effect of the business on their health is ruinous. They grow lean, nervous and consumptive. At the end of a hard day's work, they feel and act as fidgetty and cross as a hysteric old maid.

For the Patriot.

Battallion—Squat!

MR. EDITOR: Outside of well-informed military circles—or rather within the circle of small beer politicians of the Know-Nothing order—a great deal is being written, said, and sung, in relation to the non-performance of the request of Governor Banks, at Camp Massachusetts, by Major Ben. Perly Poore, of the Battalion Rifle, denominated "Savages."

As all this "Fuss and Feathers" cannot be attributed to political or personal feeling on the part of Major Poore toward Governor Banks, it is fairly to be presumed, that Major Poore's objection to the request of Governor Banks to cheer at the Monument, was founded in a correct knowledge of military propriety; he being an educated soldier—while Governor Banks, according to his own showing, knew but little of the matter, above the rank of corporal of the Waltham Light Infantry, till he was elected, by a combination of the odds and ends, the scum of political Kanzas and fanatics, to the office of Commander-in-Chief of the Militia and Navy of the State of Massachusetts.

Still, ignorant as Governor Banks was, and shew himself to be, by his request that the soldiers should cheer, (as on a Fourth of July celebration, as we are accustomed to do for American Liberty—American Independence) over the graves of soldiers, who fought in Freedom's cause, and in defence of the rights of our beloved country—now one and indissoluble; it does seem strange enough that his Adjutant General did not suggest to him his unmilitary request, knowing as Adjutant General Stone certainly does, the highest of all military honors which are paid to the dead; and also, that these are "flags craped, drums muffled, playing a dirge, with arms reversed, and the troops marching left in front."

Who, Mr. Editor, does not know, that every steamer up and down the Potomac river, "Tolls the bell while passing Mount Vernon—the Tomb of WASHINGTON!" And shall it be said of the sons of the fathers, whom he led to battle for God and Liberty, that these have degenerated into Hessians—nay, devils—to cheer over the graves of fallen heroes? DOWN EASTER.

"BORN TO BE MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

PHOTOGRAPHS — Their beauties and excellence. We were not aware until a recent visit to that fashionable resort, Chapman's Daguerreotype Rooms, on the Green, north of the Stone Temple, and were favored with an examination of some of the rare specimens on exhibition, of the perfection to which this art had been brought. The superiority of the Photograph over the common Daguerreotype, is two fold; it reflects the image in full—as large as life, and is done in so endurable a manner, as to preserve it effectually from atmospheric influences or other casualties.

Among the collection hung around the apartment, we noticed one of our esteemed friend B, whose mild, serene, and benign countenance, is but a fair counterpart of the man; also, of Squire H.—a true type of the original—beaming with good-nature, and anxious, seemingly, to impart some happy thought, which was too good to be kept; but the masterpiece of all, was the one designed for Professor B—the artist in this instance, must acknowledge himself outdone; no pencil could have been so true to Nature; every shade, every feature, every line and expression, were stamped indelibly upon the picture; not a fault or blemish could be detected; every part was perfect,—all admirably done! while gazing upon the well-known features, they seemed to beam with life and intelligence,—soon to break the silence with a cordial and friendly greeting.

Our inclination prompts us to go on still further; there were others worthy of mention: but we must curb our desire. The hour we passed was an agreeable one—profitably spent. If any of our readers shall see fit to follow our example, we will insure them a welcome, and a miniature of rare excellence, which will last for ages. Mr. Chapman's advertisement, which is explicit and to the point, may be found in our paper to-day.

JOE PENTLAND'S CIRCUS, we are authorized to say, from an official source, will be here on the 4th of next month. Make way for the grand entree. This is not their first bow to a Quincy audience; our citizens have had the opportunity before of appreciating the excellence of this troupe of Equestrian performers. Since their last visit, we are told, important acquisitions have been made to the Company, rendering it one of the most talented and efficient in the country.—Their horses are said to be unrivalled—in excellent trim—under the management of professed artists—and with riders, whose feats of horsemanship have rarely been excelled. Mr. Pentland is a very successful manager; his exhibitions, combining amusement with instruction, have ever been popular with the public; they are dignified and respectable—order and discipline being strictly observed—and nothing which will contribute to the pleasure and amusement of an audience is omitted. Our people are never backward in patronizing a good thing—we therefore bespeak for this Troupe, a cordial and welcome reception. We might go into detail, enumerating the many novelties embraced in this entertainment, but must refer the reader to their advertisement, to be found in another column.

THE WEATHER. We are now experiencing the "Line Gale." We suppose our readers knows what that is,—especially those who have lived long on this coast? It usually begins with the wind at the North-east—and generally hangs in that quarter for days and sometimes weeks—followed by sleet and rain, with just caloric enough in the atmosphere to keep it above the freezing point. It is a generator of the blues; puts the rheumatic patient upon the rack and torture, and drives the poor hypochondric invalid to the brink of suicide.

If any of our readers are troubled with boils, sores, cuts, piles, rheumatism, etc., we advise them to get a box of "My Mother's Salve." See advertisement.

A Curiosity Eighty-Six years ago.

A friend has placed in our hands the "Boston Gazette and County Journal," for December 20, 1773. Among the advertisements of this little weekly sheet, is the notice of a grand Concert of vocal and instrumental Music at Concert Hall; tickets at a half a dollar each. Perkins and Melville, sell at their shop in Cornhill, English, India, and Scotch goods. Archibald Cunningham, at his store in Ann street, near the Draw Bridge, offers for sale Lisbon Lemons, in exceeding good order, per box, with a great variety of other articles. William Scott, at his Irish Linnen Store in Ann street, between Flat Conduit and Draw Bridge, offers for sale Linnen, &c, imported from Ireland. William Greenleaf at his new Auction Room, Cornhill, offers at Public Vendue, a large assortment of Goods. To be sold, a Negro man, apply to Edes and Gill. Donald Mc Alpine intends opening a school for to teach the noble art of Self-defence, commonly called the Back Sword, at the Green Dragon Tavern. Moses Deshan, advertises his intentions of opening a Singing School at his Auction Room in Ann street. To be sold by Edward Proctor, at the sign of the Schooner, North End, also by Joseph Hall, in Cole Lane, choice Malaga Lemons, at six dollars per box, and less by the quantity, and three dollars per hundred, and nine shillings per dozen, old tenor. Mrs. Sheaffe offers for sale at her shop, at the corner of Queen street, Groceries of all kinds, choice Fontineac Wine, &c., also Playing Cards and Rappee Snuff. Lee & Jones, at their store near the Swing Bridge, offer for sale Looking Glasses, Silver and Pinch Back Watches, remarkably cheap. Andrew Oliver and R. Gould appear as Auctioneers. The Brethren of the Honorable Society of Free and Ancient Accepted Masons, are notified that the Most Worshipful Joseph Warren, Esq., Grand Master of the Continent of America, intends to celebrate the Feast of St. John the Evangelist, at Free Mason's Hall, Boston. Stearns' Almanack for the year 1774 is to be sold at Edes & Gill's, in Queen street; the same gentlemen advertise for sale Keyser's Famous Pills—good for all diseases; also the New York Pocket Almanack, "containing almost every thing necessary and useful in an Almanack for the inhabitants of this Continent" The items occupy near a column of their newspaper; other firms advertise under the names of Joseph Perse Palmer, Town Dock; Amory, Taylor & Rogers, English Goods, on King street—Nathan Frazier, Ezekiel Price, &c. But the most interesting items of the paper relate in bitter terms to the grievances of the American people by the British Government. Governor Hutchinson's course is boldly condemned and "abhored." The use of tea is condemned everywhere. Here follows an account of the destruction of the tea.

"Boston, December 20. On Tuesday last the body of the people of this and all the adjoining towns, and others from the distance of twenty miles, assembled at the Old South Meeting-House, to inquire the reason of the delay in sending the ship Dartmouth with the East India Tea back to London; and having found that the owner had not taken the necessary steps for that purpose, they enjoined him at his peril to demand of the Collector of the Custom a clearance for the ship, and appointed a Committee of ten to see it performed. After which they adjourned to the Thursday following, at 1 o'clock—They then met, and being informed by Mr. Rotch that a clearance was refused, they engaged him immediately to enter a protest and apply to the Governor for a passport by the Castle, and adjourned again, until three o'clock the same day. At which time they again met, and after waiting until near sunset, Mr. Rotch came in and informed them that he had accordingly entered his protest and waited on the Governor for a pass, but his Excellency told him he could not consistent with his duty grant it until his vessel was qualified. The people finding all their efforts to preserve the property of the East India Company and return it safely to London, frustrated by the Tea Consignees, the Collector of the Customs and the Governor of the Province, dissolved their meeting. But behold what followed! A number of brave and resolute men, determined to do all in their power to save their countrymen from ruin which their enemies had plotted, in less than four hours, emptied every chest of tea on board the three ships commanded by Captains Hall, Bruce and Coffin, amounting to three hundred and forty-two chests into the sea!! without the least damage to the ships or the owners.

"The masters and owners are well pleased that their ships are thus clear'd: and the people are almost universally congratulating each other on this happy event. (The particular account of the proceedings of the people at their meeting on Tuesday and Thursday last are omitted this week for want of room.) Capt. Loring, in a brig from London for this place, having fifty-eight chests of the Detested Tea on board, was cast ashore on the Beach of Cape Cod, last Friday, se'night; 'tis expected the Cape Indians will give us a good account of the Tea against our next."

This weekly newspaper, fifteen inches by ten in size, and numbering nine hundred and seventy-six, was printed and published by Edes & Gill, in Queen, near Court street, and is full of bold and daring articles—condemnatory of the tyranny of the Mother Country, towards the liberties of the people of the American Colonies. Many of the pieces are written with great spirit, and directly personal on Governor Hutchinson and other officials in Boston in favor of the British Crown. x.

FALL AND WINTER CLOTHING. J. W. Smith & Co., Dock Square, corner of Elm street, Boston, have just opened the largest and most superb stock of Fine Ready-made Clothing ever seen in the city of Boston, together with a large selected stock of piece goods, embracing all the newest and best styles, which are made to order in the most stylish and thorough manner. This house is well known for introducing an entirely new system in the business,—that of keeping on hand a large assortment of gentlemen's garments equal in style, quality, and workmanship, to custom work, and at the same time selling at the lowest possible prices for cash. They began by promising to do this, and making the fact extensively known. Their course has been so well appreciated, that within the last two months they have been obliged to double the capacity of their store, in order to accommodate their increasing trade. The extensive alterations and improvements have just been completed, give them unsurpassed facilities for prosecuting their business on the same popular principle as heretofore. Mr Smith has gained an enviable reputation for the excellence of his Ready made Clothing, and he maintains it, by acting fully up to the promises made to those in want of superior garments. Implicit reliance may be had in the representations of this firm; and truth of what we state. In Fall and Winter Coats, Vests and Pants, they have an endless variety, made from the choicest fabrics, in the most substantial and workmanlike manner. Don't fail to visit their store, when you go to Boston. Their advertisement to-day gives full particulars.

CARPETS AT LOW PRICES. Those who are about redecorating or furnishing their dwellings with carpets, should read the advertisement in our paper of the New England Carpet Company of Boston.

Farewell, sweet boy! thy beauteous form,
Has pass'd beyond our sight:
Celestials claim thy presence there,
In higher realms of light.

Disease's cruel pangs are past,
Serener joys begin—
Freed from the penalty that marks
Mankind's primeval sin.

"Glory to God!" the angel-choir
Its hymns of triumph raise:
"Another infant-soul has come,
To join our songs of praise."

While high above this earthly sphere,
Thy welcome thus is given—
Another, they repeat, has gone,
Within the gate of heaven.

Attending spirits guide thee there,
Where endless love survives—
And thou, sweet innocent, shall dwell
A Seraph in the skies.

Nature will hold its children here,
A short and transient day—
But the immortal part will burst,
Its prison walls of clay.

For thee, dear child, affection's strong—
Grief weeps around the sod—
But he who blest the infant, said
Its Home is with its God.

Having been so long before this community, and so universally know in the profession, any further allusion on that point we deem unnecessary. Our only object in this notice, is, to call the attention of the public to this new branch of our business, which for beauty and excellence, we have numerous testimonials from the highest authority—and specimens, which we invite all to examine. Our expenses thus far, in making the necessary arrangements, has been considerable; but we felt justified in running this risk, in the belief that we were serving the public, and that our labors ultimately would be crowned with success If we should be so fortunate, our stay may be considered permanent, otherwise at will be short. The Photograph Art must be seen to be appreciated, we, therefore, again extend a general invitation to all, to pay us an early visit.

Suitable provision will be made for Swine, Poultry, &c.

TUESDAY will be devoted to the reception and examination of articles for premium, which must be on the ground as early as 12 o'clock, M. at which time the Judges are expected to be prepared to enter upon their respective duties.

THE NEW YORK WEEKLY

has now engaged a force of talent that cannot be rivaled by any establishment in the world.

Notices of the Press,

Never before has any new candidate for public favor in the Literary World received such flattering notices from the Press. From all quarters, our editorial brethren have cheered us on by speaking of our enterprise in a manner to stimulate our vanity, and to excite the envy of our rivals.

GENERAL CHARACTER OF THE NEW YORK WEEKLY.

The WEEKLY is designed more especially as

A FIRST-CLASS STORY PAPER,

in which we intend to give our readers a succession of the Best Stories ever published in the United States! The aim and object of these productions will be to inculcate useful knowledge under the pleasing guise of fiction, or to teach great moral lessons through the same means. We shall never publish a work or line, the tendency of which is to injure the morals or taste of the reader. Every issue of the New York Weekly will contain short Sketches of Life and Manners, Noting of Travel and Adventure, Short Stories, General Summary of Events, Humorous Gleanings, Poetry, Editorials, &c. &c. &c.

As specimens of our serials, we would point to A. J. H. DUGANNE'S Great Story

GARIBALDI,

THE HERO OF ITALY.

HARRY HAZEL'S

EXCITING INDIAN ROMANCE,

THE MUTE SPY!

FRANCIS S. SMITH'S

INTENSELY INTERESTING DOMESTIC STORY,

MARGUERITE,

THE CHILD OF CHARITY!

While, as specimens of our standing departments, we point with pride to

OUR BALLADS OF THE BIBLE,

admitted by all to be the most chastely written and beautiful scriptural poems ever produced.

OUR KNOWLEDGE BOX,

in which is weekly contained a number of paragraphs of the greatest importance to house-keepers and others.

OUR PLEASANT PARAGRAPHS,

an interesting melange, ranging from grave to gay, from lively to severe.

OUR LADIES' COLUMN,

prepared especially for the ladies by one of the most brilliant lady writers of the present day.

OUR MIRTHFUL MORSELS,

OUR ITEMS OF INTEREST,

etc., etc., etc.

In a word, its Editors will use their best endeavors to get up just such a paper as will eventually find its way to every fireside in the land—that shall be a welcome visitor wherever it goes—equally popular in the workshop and the office—at the fireside of the farmer, or in the counting-room of the merchants—a paper that parents can, with safety, place in the hands of their children without note or comment, feeling certain that its influence will be to stimulate their minds to the pursuit of knowledge, or lead them to abhor vice and wrong.

Our Circulation and Prospects

The NEW YORK WEEKLY has gone up to a circulation which places it second in point of circulation in the list of publications of the day. There is but one weekly publication in the world having a larger circulation than the WEEKLY. The indications are, at present, that the circulation of the WEEKLY will soon reach half a million.—Where the newsmen were taking tens, they are now taking hundreds of copies. This is the general effect among the Five Thousand News Agents who are now selling the NEW YORK WEEKLY, while from nearly every Post Office in the country, we are daily getting subscriptions and orders for specimens.

How and where to get the Weekly.

Wherever there is a News Agent, get the paper from him. By so doing you do not run the risk of losing your money through the Post Office, or having to pay for what you will never get. If the paper you are buying from the Agent stops, you do not lose advance subscriptions, sent to a place where you have no means of looking after it. We trust the day is not far distant when every town, large enough to sustain a Post Office, will have its News Agency.

OUR TERMS.

The price of the NEW YORK WEELY FOUR CENTS, but where Agents have to pay extra freight or postage, a higher price is necessarily charged. When sent by mail, the price will invariably be $2 a year, in advance. Subscriptions taken for three months. Two copies will be sent for one year for $3, four copies for $6, eight copies for $12. Postmasters and others who get up clubs of ten, and send us $15 at one time, will be entitled to an extra copy for their trouble. The bills of all solvent banks taken at par for subscriptions. Canada subscribers must send twenty-five cents extra with every subscription, to pre-pay the American postage.

All letters and communications, in relation to the Editorial or Business Departments of the NEW YORK WEEKLY, must be addressed to

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

A compound remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Para Sarsaparilla, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from Strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found of the following complaints:—

SCROFULA AND SCROFULOUS COMPLAINTS, ERUPTIONS AND ERUPTIVE DISEASES, ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES, TUMORS, SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, SYPHILIS AND SYPHILITIC AFFECTIONS, MERCURIAL DISEASE, DROPSY, NEURALGIA OR TIC DOULOUREUX, DEBILITY, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, ERYSIPELAS, ROSE OR ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, and indeed the whole class of complaints arising from IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD.

This compound will be found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the foul humors which fester in the blood at that season of the year. By the timely expulsion of them many rankling disorders are nipped in the bud. Multitudes can, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerous sores, through which the system will strive to rid itself of corruptions, if not assisted to do this through the natural channels of the body by an alterative medicine. Cleanse out the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, or sores; cleanse it when you find it is obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Even where no particular disorder is felt, people enjoy better health, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. Keep the blood healthy, and all is well; but with this pabulum of life disordered, there can be no lasting health. Sooner or later something must go wrong, and the great machinery of life is disordered or overthrown.

Sarsaparilla has, and deserves much, the reputation, of accomplishing these ends. But the world has been egregiously deceived by preparations of it, partly because the drug alone has not all the virtue that is claimed for it, but more because many preparations, pretending to be concentrated extracts of it, contain but little of the virtue of Sarsaparilla, or any thing else.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter and painful disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself is justly despised, and has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound Sarsaparilla, and intend to supply such a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. And we think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. In order to secure their complete eradication from the system, the remedy should be judiciously taken according to directions on the bottle.

PREPARED BY

DR. J. C. AYER & CO.

LOWELL, MASS.

Price, $1 per Bottle; Six Bottles for $5.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

has won for itself such a renown for the cure of every variety of Throat and Lung Complaint, that it is entirely unnecessary for us to recount the evidence of its virtues, wherever it has been employed. As it has long been in constant use throughout this section, we need not do more than assure the people its quality is kept up to the best it ever has been, and that it may be relied on to do for their relief all it has ever been found to do.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

FOR THE CURE OF

Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach, Erysipelas, Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Tetter, Tumors and Salt Rheum, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, as a Dinner Pill, and for Purifying the Blood.

They are sugar-coated, so that the most sensitive can take them pleasantly, and they are the best aperient in the world for all the purposes of a family physic.

Price 25 cents per Box; Five boxes for $1.00.

Great numbers of Clergymen, Physicians, Statesmen, and eminent personages, have lent their names to certify the unparalleled usefulness of these remedies, but our space here will not permit the insertion of them. The Agents below named furnish gratis our AMERICAN ALMANAC in which they are given; with also full descriptions of the above complaints, and the treatment that should be followed for their cure.

Do not be put off by unprincipled dealers with other preparations they make more profit on. Demand AYER'S, and take no others. The sick want the best aid there is for them, and they should have it.

All our Remedies are for sale by

Mrs. E. HAYDEN, and all Medicine Dealers.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

Poetry.

A Farmer's Song.

We envy not the princely man,
In city or in town,
Who wonders whether pumpkin vines
Run up the hill or down;
We care not for his marble halls,
Nor yet his heaps of gold,
We would not own his sordid heart
For all his wealth thrice told.

We are the favored ones of earth,
We breathe pure air each morn,
We sow—we reap the golden grain—
We gather in the corn;
We toil—we live on what we earn,
And more than this we do,
We hear of starving millions round,
And gladly feed them, too.

The lawyer lives on princely fees,
Yet drags a weary life;
He never knows a peaceful hour—
His atmosphere is strife.
The merchant thumbs his yard-stick o'er—
Grows haggard at his toil;
He's not the man God meant him for—
Why don't he till the soil?

The doctor plods through storm and cold,
Plods at his patient's will;
When dead and gone he plods again
To get his lengthy bill.
The printer, (bless his noble soul,)
He grasps the mighty earth,
And stamps on our welcome sheet,
To cheer the farmer's hearth.

We sing the honor of the plow,
And honor of the press—
Two noble instruments of toil,
With each a power to bless.
The bone and nerve of this fast age,
True wealth of human kind—
One tills the ever generous earth,
The other tils the mind.

Hymn to the Beautiful

Wake! the world is rife with Beauty,
Day is gemmed with myriad dyes,
Nature throws her starry mantle
Nightly o'er the boundless skies.
Redolent the air with music—
Song of bird, of breeze, and stream,
With the cataract of water
Thunders forth its ceaseless hymn.

Divinity doth fashion Nature
Into forms of joy and grace,
Then through man works transformation
Into Art, for time and place;
Yet, though human hands may labor,
He who looks with eye of thought
May behold the God of Nature
Living in the beauty wrought.

Marble lips seem near to utterance,
Painted canvas beams with life,
And we stand enchained, enraptured,
Overpowered with the strife
Of emotions that awaken
In our soul, thus held in thrall,
Thought like this—if this is human,
What must be the God of all!

God doth dwell throughout creation:
When we bow to Beauty's shrine
We do meet him there as truly
As in that men call "divine;"
And the purer is that Beauty,
More of God the mind can see;
Thus alone shall we behold Him
In the vast Eternity.

Human souls, forever struggling
For some future, coming bliss,
For some world of matchless splendor,
Look! enjoy thy God in this;
For the "Future" never cometh—
O the Present we must bow;
Our Eternity is dwelling
In the ever present Now.

Requisites for "Worldly Success"

To win the prize of the world's great race,
A man should have a brazen face;
An iron arm to give a stroke,
And heart as sturdy as an oak;
Eyes like a cat, good in the dark,
And teeth as piercing as a shark;
Ears to hear the gentlest sound,
Like moles that burrow in the ground;
A mouth as close as patent locks,
And stomach stronger than an ox;
His tongue should be a razor blade,
His conscience India-rubber made;
His hands as grasping as a vice;
His shoulders should be adequate
To bear a couple thousand weight;
His legs like pillars, firm and strong,
To move this great machine along;
With supple knees to cringe and crawl,
And cloven feet placed under all.

Anecdotes.

That's a fine strain, said one gentleman to another alluding to the tones of a singer at a concert, the other evening.

Yes, said a countryman, who sat near, but if he strains much more he'll burst.

I do wish I could be cured of lying in bed so late in the morning, said a lazy husband, turning round upon his pillow.

Well, I will try the water-cure, said his wife pouring a tumblerful over him.

Dan, did you go to the mines?
Yes.
What did you dig.
I dug home as soon as possible.

Sam, did you see Mr. Jenkins, the new overseer?

Yes, Messs, I meet him down by the cotten-gin.

He's a good looking fellow, isn't he?

Well, massa, he talks like a good looking man—he made a bow; dat's all he said.

At an evening party, a gentleman carving a chicken asked a lady what part she preferred.

I will take a foot handle, she said.
